112 Die In Spain Jet Crash

BARCELONA, Spain (UPI)—Search crews reached the wreckage of a chartered jetliner today and reported all 112 persons aboard killed when the plane crashed into the side of a mountain on a flight for British vacationers to Spain's Costa Brava resort.

"We can now officially confirm that there are no survivors," a spokesman for the Spanish Air Force reported.

The four-engine Comet, owned by the Dan-Air Co., crashed Friday night on its approach to Barcelona Airport from Manchester, England. It carried 105 passengers and seven crew members.

SOCCER MEMBERS

The passengers were reported to include seven members of a British soccer team, all bachelors.

"It was decided that all the bachelors should go and that all the married men should stay at home," said Robert Grant, a supporter of the industrial league team in London.

Rescue workers at the scene said the plane broke into three pieces and came to rest in a small valley surrounded by trees 32 miles north of Barcelona. The area, in the Montseny Mountains, is known as the Peaks of the Needles.

Officials said there was no indication of a cause for the crash.

The British Consul General, D.H. Clibborn, flew to the area in a helicopter to help identify the bodies.

INTENSIVE SEARCH

Discovery of the plane followed a night of intensive land and sea search centered near the seaside village of Mataro, 14 miles northeast of Barcelona. Some residents of the village had reported seeing a plane go down.

The Montseny Mountains are a rugged range forming a half moon to the north of Barcelona.

In London, a spokesman for Dan-Air said he believed all the passengers aboard the Comet were British and that they included a baby.

The spokesman said the passengers included 48 men, 53 women, three children and the infant. There were seven crewmen.

The Barcelona airport said the jet was 12 miles out and at an altitude of 6,000 feet when it lost contact on radar on on radio.

The crash was the fourth in the last 10 years of a British charter flight en route to the Spanish Costa Brava area.

On June 3, 1967, a plane from Manston, Kent, England to Perpignan, France, crashed in the mountains, killing all 88 persons aboard.

DOUGHBOY'S FOURTH

Symbolic on this Fourth of July, the Doughboy statue stands in the morning sun outside the old San Rafael courthouse—the American flag rippling gently before it. Marinites and Southern Sonoma residents had planned major celebrations this Independence Day—parades, fireworks and various day-long programs—to mark the country's 194th anniversary.

Marin Grows 39 Per Cent Since 1960

Preliminary figures of the 1970 census show that Marin County has a population of 204,046.

The figure indicates a growth of 39 per cent over the official 1960 total of 146,820.

According to the preliminary population count released by the Census Bureau in San Francisco, San Rafael has grown 88 per cent during the past decade; Novato, 60 per cent; and San Anselmo and Mill Valley, smaller percentages.

San Rafael grew from 20,460 in 1960 to 38,493 this year; Novato from 17,881 to 28,593; Mill Valley from 10,441 to 12,147, and San Anselmo from 11,584 to 12,401.

Figures were unavailable for other Marin cities.

Official figures are not expected until November or December, but the preliminary figures have been close in the past. The 1960 June figure for Marin missed the official count by only 1,300.

The state Department of Finance estimated Marin's population at 187,000 in 1965, then 201,200 in 1967, and 203,600 in 1969.

Sharon Walsh Is Victor In England

Sharon Walsh, 18, of San Rafael today won the Wimbledon Junior Tennis Championship at Wimbledon, England, it was learned by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Les Walsh.

The recent San Rafael High School graduate defeated a Russian girl in the finals by a score of 8-6, 6-4, her father said. No other details were available.

In the all-Australian men's finals today John Newcombe defeated Ken Rosewall 5-7, 6-3, 6-2, 3-6, 6-1.

'HONOR AMERICA'

Graham Calls For End To Divisions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Evangelist Billy Graham opened day-long "Honor America" festivities today with a warning that "the American dream could be turned into a nightmare" unless the nation ends its divisions.

U.S. Park Police estimated 15,000 to 20,000 persons, including a few hundred dissenting hippies, filled the area in front of the Lincoln Memorial for the Fourth of July patriotic-religious ceremony that was televised nationally.

Hollywood entertainers led by Bob Hope were scheduled to bring the observance to a close tonight with an entertainment show on the Washington Monument grounds.

Graham, the principal speaker at the morning ceremony, devoted most of his address to disunity in the nation and said: "Today we call upon all Americans to stop this polarization before it is too late."

His remarks drew loud cheers from the crowd and a few jeers from the hippies, who waded into the reflecting pool in front of the Lincoln Memorial. They held aloft a banner reading "Hour of decision—God or Country" and the hippie flag emblazoned with a marijuana leaf.

Late Friday night, police clashed with about 200 youths, identified as yippies, who gathered on the Washington Monument grounds chanting "smoke marijuana." Six policemen were injured and five persons arrested before the crowd dispersed.

There was no hint of trouble today, however. The thousands who came to cheer the "Honor America" participants paid scant attention to the hippies in the reflecting pool.

Although sponsors billed "Honor America Day" as a nonpartisan show of unity in a divided country, the observance was assailed by some critics as an "Establishment" program and by some as a maneuver to cloak Nixon administration policies in religious and patriotic fervor.

Some local blacks called for a boycott, and the crowd at the Lincoln Memorial was nearly all white.

The program opened with a two-minute "national salute" in which citizens from Maine to California expressed their patriotic feelings by sounding auto horns, ringing church bells, blowing factory whistles and shooting off firecrackers.

Pat Boone sang the national anthem. Astronaut Frank Borman said a prayer. Rabbi Marc Tanenbaum read the scripture. Bishop Fulton J. Sheen gave the benediction. And Kate Smith belted out "God Bless America" as she has so often sung it before.

The religious service was followed by a colorful "procession of flags." With military bands and Boy Scouts leading the way, thousands of people walked from the Lincoln Memorial to the White House ellipse to plant miniature American flags in a pattern that spelled out the letters USA.

Rounding out the celebration will be an evening entertainment program at the Washington Monument emceed by Bob

Fierce Battle Of Wills Escalating Over Budget

Senate In Session; Reagan Hits Demos

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — California dragged into an unprecendented fourth day without a budget today as a fierce battle of wills between Gov. Ronald Reagan and 13 Senate Democrats escalated.

Both sides dug their heels in even deeper and the Senate decided to bypass usual Fourth of July celebrations at home in favor of another run at thawing the deadlock over Reagan's $6.59 billion budget.

"I think it has made us look ridiculous in the eyes of our own citizenry," Reagan told a special news conference Friday night. "And it has made government look a little less stable in California as far as the rest of the country is concerned."

He summoned newsmen to his office where he announced rejection of a demand by holdout Democrats to supply the votes to pass the budget in exchange for an extra $180 million in school aid. They want the sum included in his $1 billion tax shift bill.

REPORTS CONFLICT

Seven Democrats handed Reagan their proposal during an hour and a half meeting in his capitol office. One senator said Reagan became "angry" at one point but the governor described himself as "righteously indignant."

They handed the governor a letter insisting that the first $180 million contained in the tax revision legislation be spent for extra aid to local schools "rather than for tax reductions for luxury homes for the wealthy few."

"We do not now advocate, nor have we ever advocated during this debate a tax increase," they told him.

Senate Democratic floor leader George Moscone said that the Republican governor "came out in a very rough demeanor. . .I don't think on the basis of getting what we asked for the meeting was very fruitful," he said.

LAST YEAR

Assembly Democrats blocked the budget last year for three days while successfully demanding more local school aid. The Senate Democratic barrier pitched the state into an unprecedented fourth day.

The Assembly approved the

Nixon, Paris Aide Discuss Future Course

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (UPI)—President Nixon, seeking a peaceful solution to the war in Vietnam, summoned his new chief negotiator at the Paris peace talks to his seaside White House for a strategy session today.

The meeting signals the start of "phase two" of Nixon's plan to wind down the war by upgrading the stalemated talks and giving Bruce "great flexibility" in dealing with the Communist negotiators.

One of the issues expected to be discussed at the mid-morning meeting was the possibility of a coalition government in Saigon. President Nixon said in a Wednesday broadcast the United States would not impose a coalition, but he did not rule out the chance that Saigon would voluntarily accept it.

Sitting in on the meeting were Ambassador Philip C. Habib, acting chief of the American delegation, U. Alexis Johnson, undersecretary of state for political affairs, and Dr. Henry A. Kissinger, Nixon's chief foreign policy adviser.

The president motored to the El Adobe restaurant in San Juan Capistrano, about seven miles to the north, with his wife, Pat, daughter, Tricia, and close friend, Charles G. "Bebe" Rebozo.

Nixon reportedly had what was called the "Nixon special" consisting of tacos, refried beans, enchiladas and tortillas.

Following the dinner, the Nixon party returned to the compound.

Rioting In Belfast Leaves Five Dead

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI)—British troops battled street by street through heavy sniper fire today and ended a night of rioting that left five persons dead and at least 80 wounded.

The task force of 1,500 British soldiers clamped a curfew on a 50-block area of the Falls Road section and began a house-to-house search for weapons stockpiled by Catholics in their campaign against Protestants in this strife-torn corner of Ireland. Any citizen leaving his home was arrested on sight.

The curfew was ordered lifted for a two-hour period beginning at 5 p.m. to permit housewives to do their weekend shopping. Bread and milk trucks entered the area under armed escort.

Two of the victims were rooftop snipers, picked off by British soldiers who pushed into the area under the glare of searchlights and finally restored a semblance of peace at 5 a.m. Three other civilians were also killed.

Nineteen soldiers were wounded along with at least 61 civilians, 17 of whom were taken to hospitals.

Six hours later, an Army spokesman said search teams had seized more than 100 rifles and pistols, 15,000 rounds of ammunition, 45 pounds of explosives, eight grenades and 100 homemade incendiary bombs.

It was a straight clash between the British Army—sent in last August to protect the Catholics after days of riots with Protestants—and bands of grenade-tossing youths.

The Protestants for once stood aside.

The deaths raised to 12 the number killed in two weekends of rioting touched off by the arrest of Roman Catholic civil rights leader Bernadette Devlin, a member of British Parliament, who was sent to prison for six months for participating in last August's riots in Londonderry.

The army sealed off the embattled Falls Road area with iron barricades, placed it under an indefinite curfew and began a massive search for arms. A spokesman said it would be the biggest house-to-house search in Northern Ireland's history.

It was the seizure of caches of submachine guns, molotov cocktails, pistols and homemade dynamite grenades in a series of raids by the army and police that provided the immediate spark for the rioting that broke out Friday.

U.S. Admits Shelling Cambodian Positions

SAIGON (UPI)—The U.S. command acknowledged today that U.S. guns have been bombarding border areas of Cambodia since American troops withdrew last Tuesday. Military sources said South Vietnam had pulled out the last of 4,000 troops rushed to the defense of Phnom Penh.

A military spokesman in Phnom Penh said a heavy concentration of Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops had massed in Kompong Thom Province for an attack against the provincial capital of Kompong Thom, 80 miles north of Phnom Penh.

South Vietnamese commanders, military sources said, have withdrawn the last of the forces rushed to Phnom Penh when Cambodian commanders reported an imminent threat to the capital six days ago.

The informed sources said the South Vietnamese Marines and Army troops made only light contacts with the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese around Phnom Penh and the commanders concluded the threat report was phoney.

They pulled back from Phnom Penh to positions around Kompong Speu, 25 miles southeast of the capital 2,500 infantrymen and armored troops. A 1,500-man marine force was withdrawn from Phnom Penh's outskirts to South Vietnam, the sources said.

The sources said South Vienamese corps headquarters established at Phnom Penh airport was removed today to the Mekong Delta City of Can Tho in South Vietnam.

In Vietnam, the U.S. command in a delayed report said six Vietnamese civilians were killed and eight wounded when two high-explosive shells struck a house Wednesday one mile south of the provincial capital of Ham Tan 75 miles east of Saigon.

Spokesmen for American commanders said artillery fire

Pacific Winds, Fog Expected To Cool Off Marin

Marin sweltered for the second straight day yesterday but Pacific winds and fog are expected to cool the thermometer for the July 4 weekend.

Temperatures in the 80s were expected today and tomorrow.

The mercury bubbled over 100 again yesterday in some parts of Marin. Terra Linda reported 107. San Anselmo had 100. It reached 94 in San Rafael.

But smog was down because a weather inversion lessened. The combined pollution index for San Francisco and Oakland was a light 36, compared with Thursday's high reading of 103.

A Well-Spent Vacation: Some Tales From Franconia

By such measure, this writer can recall a real winner.

It was a week spent in a tiny West German dirt-street farm village of less than a dozen houses.

Dairying is big in this village. The truck which comes at dawn to pick up milk at the farm houses signals the arrival of each new morning. Not long after, the sound of farmers' tractors headed for the fields, pulling trailers loaded with manure, announce by sound and smell that a new working day is beginning. In the fields dairy feed is produced. In the farmyards hay is stacked high in neat bales.

It was not until the second or third day that it became apparent there are no dairy barns as we know them, nor are any cows to be seen.

WHERE ARE the cows?

Inside the farmhouses, it was explained.

Why aren't they brought outside to pasture in good weather as is the way of dairymen in the Alps?

These cows, it was explained, are a special Franconian breed which spend their entire lives indoors and see the light of day only when the door to the stable end of the house is open.

The cows prove amazingly clean for spending their entire lives in a stable. The farm house tends to smell like a stable.

But the people, not the cows, are what makes the village unforgettable.

OBSERVE THE MAN who is reclaiming a garden from an uncultivated thicket at the intersection of two dirt roads on the edge of the village. You see him there only from dawn to dusk on Sunday and week days from after supper until dark. If you inquire, you will learn that he was what we would call a nurseryman in East Germany. He fled to the West, taking a room in the beer hall-guest house of this tiny village. He found work as a building laborer. Later his wife came to join him. Even later, the communists permitted his aging father to depart East Germany (they don't have to pay him a pension after he leaves). Now the three of them share tiny upstairs rooms in the 150-year-old guest house, which has no inside plumbing, save a cold water tap in the ground floor hallway.

The plot of ground this old nurseryman lovingly cultivates is known as the "Russian's Grave." After the end of World War II, the body of a Russian army deserter was found in the forest near the village. The villagers buried him in the uncultivated tangle by the road junction at the edge of the village. A few years ago, West German government authorities came through the countryside disinterring unknown dead and removing them to proper cemeteries. But in this village, the place from which the Russian solider's body was removed will evermore be known as "the Russian's grave."

DURING THE YEARS that the Russian body lay there, his grave was tenderly cared for and regularly decorated by one farmer's wife from the little village.

She had lost her son in the German army in Russia. Along with hundreds of thousands of others, he was reported "missing" and never heard from again.

Because she couldn't tend her own son's grave, she tended the Russian's grave and expressed the hope that somewhere in Russia an understanding mother was tending the grave of an unknown German soldier, her son.

WHO IS THE OLD FELLOW who walks always alone, doesn't speak unless first spoken to, says as little as is civil, and even sits alone at the beer hall while all other village men sit together for conversation?

"Bormann" is what some of his neighbors call him, although not within his hearing.

During the week he works in the forest with the crew that still manufactures charcoal in the ancient way.

But he keeps to himself. Even at lunch time he sits alone at a distance from the others.

If you offer him a ride, he declines cooly and laconically.

The villagers know he is a bit too young to be the real Martin Bormann, but they enjoy winking slyly as they tell strangers that this loner in their midst has to be Hitler's disappeared aide-in-hiding.

IN THE LITTLE SHANTY on the far side of the village lives an old crone, bent nearly double by the burden of her toil. She looks like a witch come to life from an old Disney cartoon movie.

To some of the villagers she is known as "Herr Friederich's widow." This name is startling to strangers because Friedrich is a first name and nobody is ever called Mr. in German in connection with his first name.

Furthermore, "Herr Friedrich's widow" was never married.

When World War II was over, she was still a fairly young woman — the only survivor of her family in an East German village. Nearby had been a monastery. It was destroyed in the war. Only one monk survived. He was Brother Friedrich (not his real name, of course).

The two fled together to West Germany where they had neither friends nor relatives. They were permitted to occupy a left-over temporary cottage for bomb refugees which still stood in the tiny village of this vacation visit.

The lady of this house referred to the man of the house as "Herr Friedrich" when she mentioned him to the villagers.

When he died a few years ago, she confided to villagers that "Herr Friedrich's" wish had been to go to God unstained and untarnished. During the two decades they had shared the same house, they had "never touched each other."

Today "Herr Friedrich's widow" is a proud woman. She is proud that she made it possible for "Herr Friedrich" to achieve his life's goal — to go to God unstained and untarnished.

How does "Herr Friedrich's widow" survive alone and in her crippled condition?

She labors in her garden each day from dawn to dusk. She goes to bed at dark for she has not the wherewithal to provide light or heat for her shack. On Sunday, however, she is up well before dawn and on the road by foot to a distant village where she attends her church.

If Sherwood Anderson had visited a certain Franconian village, the name of his best-selling book would not have been "Winesburg, Ohio," and the stories in it would have been even better.

Admonition Around Our Liberty Bell

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Firebugs Blamed For Blaze Series

I am writing this letter having again been awakened by fire engines for the third night in succession. I am sure the people living in the area of Sun Valley are as aggravated and angry as I am at these fires set in the same place, at the same time day and night during the past week. In at least three instances our family have been awakened to the sight of flames and the smell of smoke, and sparks from these fires have landed on or near our property and that of other homes in the area.

There seems little doubt that this is the work of arsonists, and it is high time that San Rafael and San Anselmo City Councils offered a reward of $1,000 or more to arrest these firebugs. Furthermore if teen-agers or children are found to be responsible, their parents should pay the cost to the taxpayer for the use of the fire department as well as the cost of the reward. I would like to emphasize that firecrackers have not been heard close to the time these fires were set, so that they hardly seem to be accidental. Such arsonists are potentially murderers and should be confined until mentally cured of this lethal habit. I personally expect an immediate governmental response to this dangerous situation.

Hopeful Note For Bike Trail

Thank you for your excellent editorial of June 12 entitled "Marin Bike Trails Find It a Slow and Bumpy Struggle."

Please let me add a more optimistic note. Despite the fact that on June 22 no monies were allocated in the 1970-71 budget by the board of supervisors for any bicycle route which would have provided safe transportation for any adult or child going to and from school or work, condemnation papers were filed June 23 by the county counsel's office. This legal move will remove the bottleneck which now exists on the one-half mile stretch of Northwestern Pacific right-of-way from Kappas Yacht Harbor to the heliport. Your editorial failed to mention the vital nature of this link. No legal safe way is available for children or adults to travel north from Sausalito except by motor vehicle. Sausalito children attend high school in Mill Valley. Accidents are occurring both to bicyclist and hitchhikers!

According to County Counsel Douglas J. Mahoney, Marin County is specifically authorized by Streets and Highways Code Section 951 to maintain bicycle paths alongside county highways. . .

Galbraith Theory Put Under Scrutiny

I read with great interest the article by John Kenneth Galbraith (I.J, June 27) in which he seems satisfied that he has discovered a new view of economics wherein the producer is the villain who can and does raise prices and wages. . .

As I understand his explanation he says the producer conditions the consumer so that the latter appears to be the eager gullible buyer who is responsible for the product demand which pushes prices higher in the economy. This article explains fully why people buy, but not why prices keep rising. Prices generally go up when the supply becomes short and fails to meet the demand. This is not our problem. Aside from the housing market our consumer products are in adequate supply. Certainly no shortage exists that would call for higher prices for this reason.

I agree, as Mr. Galbraith points out that higher prices are self inflicted, but not because industry uses the principle that "it pays to advertise" but because the people have become insensitive to basic economics.

As I see it, "unless the laws of supply and demand are free to operate our national economy cannot remain in balance." The "labor market" by assuming concepts other than this economic reality has created such an imbalance. A situation where qualified workers must stand on the side lines while other workers demand higher compensation is not honest, but more important is the fact that under such controls the cost of production is no longer free, it can move in only one direction and that is up.

LINES ON LIVING

Lament Of Jeremiah Dreadfully True Today

By Rabbi HAIM KEMELMAN

The ancient prophet of Jerusalem, Jeremiah, coined the lamentable phrase which has now become the reality of our life: "Peace, peace, peace; and there is no peace."

We say peace and we have war; we say peace and we see desolation; we say peace and there is no peace in our midst.

What has happened to the civilization of man that after all the celebrations and salutations of peace — for thousands of years — we are now invoking the princely and prophetic concept of harmonic humanity only to make a mockery of it? What has become of the beautiful words of peace and love preached on the heights of mounts of the great religions? In the name of what cult, what God, what humanity do humans kill one another, mutilate one another, hate one another?

DREADFULLY, the human animal can be the most beastly. He will twist words to mask his animality and cite scriptures to prove his humanity. He will then go on hating more for love and ravaging more for peace — losing his own soul and those of others. There is a war of arms in Southeast Asia and there is a war of hearts inside America, and there is a war of attrition inside the heart. And there is little consolation in shouting at one another when the elements of human peace are shattered.

"Peace, peace, peace; and there is no peace." Even the symbol of peace is broken, with the crown lying in the dust. The star of peace over Jerusalem is more than eclipsed. Bloody stains cover the paths where divine prophecy of peace first went forth. There are no harbingers of peace in Jerusalem today, only the thunder of explosives and firearms. The city of eternal peace, the land of prophecy of universal concord lies in the dust of lethal powder. School children leave their homes never sure to return, as some of their playmates are found blown to smithereens by terror lurking from the dark. The innocent, the people who have nothing to do with it all — on both sides of the border — suffer and are bloodied in agony and pain, crying "Peace, peace, peace; and there is no peace."

THERE IS NO peace because the conditions are frightfully missing. We can have human desolation and call it peace. But peace is not a platitude, it is a proposition. The ancients had a prophetic designation for it, referring to its condition as a convenant of peace — imperatives embodied in a set of relationships of mutual respect, recognition and the binding commitment of reciprocal human interaction. They also called it shalom, meaning peace, but also testifying to wholeness — to total human fulfillment through involvement.

Peace is not the scribbling of a signature on a piece of paper that carries no firm identity and no certain reality. Peace is not negotiated by lip service, phrase peddling and absenteeism. Peace is a total condition of humanity, of complementary human relations: of contact between peoples, of contract between nations, of a covenant of hearts.

There are no half measures to peace — inner peace and outer peace. It's all or nothing. There is only one way to peace — peace! Active peace! Verbal peace! And the price of peace is peace — total and in one piece, not in desolation.

It's high time for man to come home in peace, to raise his sights to the heights of mountains, to see clearer and to do better in behalf of peace, in behalf of humanity. Perhaps we can go back to the origin of prophecy and begin anew the works of peace — in our land and abroad — and see the vision of the prophet: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of the messenger of good tidings, that announceth peace, the harbinger of good tidings that announceth salvation."

Nixon's Report On Cambodia Leaves Many Things Unmentioned

WASHINGTON — Taken within his own frame of reference, President Nixon's balance sheet on Cambodia is impressive. Despite the deliberate ambiguities as to the future, he makes the case for the success of the military incursion.

What is left outside the carefully restricted frame is quite another matter. Large areas of Cambodia have been overrun and destroyed. Reports to private welfare organizations indicate that hundreds of thousands of displaced persons are without a means of livelihood.

At the height of the invasion a report in the New York Times told of the destruction by South Vietnamese forces of the country's largest rubber plantation. For employment and for hard-currency earnings it was as if in the United States an invading army had destroyed General Motors and Ford. Other similar installations on which the fragile Cambodian economy depended were wiped out or severly damaged.

WHAT THE PRESIDENT'S carefully constructed recital left out was the balance sheet of human misery. The ethnic hostilities between Thais, Cambodians and Vietnamese, deeply rooted in the past, came boiling to the surface with the spread of the war to Cambodia.

Early accounts told of attempts to transfer Cambodian residents of Vietnamese origin to South Vietnam. They will scarcely be better off than in the refugee camps in Cambodia except perhaps for a greater sense of security, out of reach of Cambodian hostility.

If the uncertain Lon Nol regime is to have any future, massive economic aid will be essential to stem the tide of hunger, suffering and disorder.

IT IS ON the future of Lon Nol that the President's report is vaguest. For the first time since the start on April 30 there is the suggestion that preventing a Communist takeover of Cambodia was one motive for the action. The stress hitherto has been wholly on destroying the sanctuaries to protect American forces in South Vietnam and insure the future of the Vietnamization program.

Whether Lon Nol can be saved is an open question. He has of necessity ceded large areas of the country already occupied by the Communist enemy. The Cambodian army —30,000 by a generous count— is unprepared to use the variety of weapons being flown in by the United States. With assorted uniforms and often without shoes, they are the least warlike of all the Indochinese peoples.

The suspicion will not down that behind the deliberate vagueness of the President's references to Cambodia's future is a half-concealed intent to make sure by one means or another that American help sustains an anti-communist regime in Phnom Penh. The report is current that a strong and determined right-wing character waits in the wings to take over — with American backing — if Lon Nol falters. This would not be too hard to bring off as the regime becomes increasingly dependent on American aid.

AT HIS LAST press conference, Secretary of State William P. Rogers put emphasis on the President having informed him that the United States would shortly send an ambassador to Phnom Penh. At present a charge d' affaires heads a staff of 30 to 35, including military attaches. This could be more than a routine act, since it makes little sense to send an ambassador to a capital in imminent danger of being swallowed up by the Communists.

THEN THERE IS that other balance sheet of divisiveness here at home which the President acknowledged in passing. One measure is the 58-to-37 vote in the Senate on the Cooper-Church Amendment to curtail the President's options in Cambodia.

The division will grow. It will not be healed until the war is ended.

ART BUCHWALD

If You're Seeking Federal Funds, Beware Of Successful Program

WASHINGTON — Despite everything you hear about the government, there still is plenty of money around for projects. The only trouble is, you can't get the money if you have a plan that works. You must have one that no one is quite sure about.

A vice president of a university system in the Northeast told me about this the other day when he applied for money for a program to run summer schools for students who needed extra help to get into college. He told me the meeting went something like this:

"NOW MR. HAAS,' from our records it appears that you're applying for a grant of $500,000 to run a summer school project for students hoping to keep up in college this fall."

"That's correct. We did it last year, and it was tremendously successful. We only had a drop-out rate of 6 per cent."

"Oh, dear me. Then this is not a pilot project."

"No, it's not. We know it works."

"WHAT A SHAME."

"What do you mean what a shame?"

"Well, if this were a pilot project the government would be happy to finance it. We'd be very interested in knowing what could come of it. But we can't very well give money to something that's been proven, can we?"

"Why the hell not?"

"Mr. Haas, we're very willing to fund any educational program, providing it's iffy. But we can't throw money away on things that work. Congress would have a fit."

"I still don't understand why."

"I'M TRYING to explain it to you. The government has no trouble getting money from Congress for study programs. It doesn't matter how much it costs to study a program; we can get the funds. But once we ask for money for a program that has been proven successful, Congress will be committed to it, and nobody wants that, do they?"

"Suppose that I request the money for a study project. Could I get it then?"

"But you already told me that it had worked last summer. There's no sense having a study of it, if it works."

"I'm not trying to be difficult, but this is a very important project. We are taking in people this year who are going to find it tough sledding to keep up in the fall unless they have some remedial work."

"IT'S NOT OUR fault that your program worked last summer, Mr. Haas. Had it failed, we would have given you a blank check to try it a different way. But we're not here to dole out taxpayers' money for programs that have succeeded."

"Just the other day a superintendent of a public system in the Midwest tried a visual-reading program for his state which turned into a disaster. The machines didn't work, the teachers couldn't handle them, and the students lost interest after the first five minutes."

"Did we cut him off? We did not. We gave him another $10 million to find out why he failed. And we're ready to pour in another $10 million if he doesn't come up with answers. The whole department is excited by the failure."

"IS THERE ANY possible way of getting the $500,000, knowing what you know about my program?"

"I hardly think so, Mr. Haas, You've made a mess of things as it is. Our motto in the government is, 'Nothing fails like success.'"

Molotov cocktails in a cemetery led to the rumor that police had insisted on searching the coffin of a young girl who died a day or so earlier.

Angry youths attacked the police with stones and crowbars, troops moved in with nauseau gas and the fighting flared.

Roman Catholic priests tried in vain to restore order. Housewives linked arms and tried to keep the mob from the troops but the youths commandeered a bus, drove it straight at the line of women, and then overturned it and set it afire.

Grenades and dynamite charges began to go off, shattering glass in homes and shops. The first snipers went into action.

The army proclaimed a curfew at 10:30 p.m., warning people through a loud speaker on a helicoptor "Go to your homes! go to your homes!... or you will be arrested."

Many of the older men drifted away, but younger ones stayed on the streets behind rough barricades.

The army sent sharpshooters to the roofs of tall buildings overlooking the area, and shortly before midnight the first of 1,500 troops began moving into the Roman Catholic stronghold under heavy sniper fire.

Away from the riot center, bombs exploded in front of a newspaper office, damaged a church, set fire to a gasoline station and slightly damaged a savings bank. Two soldiers who arrived at the Belfast Savings Bank after the blast were shot in the legs by snipers.

Suit Threatens To Cut Power Of Penn Central

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Three utility firms filed suit Thursday night threatening to cut off power to the bankrupt Penn Central Railroad unless its bills were paid.

The suit which also asks for an estimated $2.3 million in back payment was filed hours after the Interstate Commerce Commission announced plans in Washington to begin a full investigation into why the railroad went broke.

The action was filed jointly in a petition by the Philadelphia Electric Co., Consolidated Edison of New York Inc. and the Pennsylvania Power and Light Co. The three firms supply electricity, gas and steam power to the railroad.

Terra Linda Driver Is Fair

A Terra Linda man was reported in fair condition today at Marin General Hospital with injuries received when his car overturned on the Terra Linda onramp to Highway 101 at 8:05 a.m. yesterday.

Donald Mark Hartland, 28, of 320 Devon Drive, suffered fractured ribs, multiple face cuts and a possible fractured back, the hospital said.

The California Highway Patrol reported that Hartland was thrown from the car as it overturned and was then pinned under it. Passing motorists freed him.

NIXON

"Honor America Day" mass patriotic rally on the Lincoln Memorial in Washington had White House backing, Nixon limited his participation to a taped message, which will be broadcast.

Nixon plans to return to Washington Monday after an unusually busy 12-day sojourn at this Pacific headquarters. His mood appears more buoyant now America troops have been withdrawan from Cambodia.

The chief executive now is hopeful Bruce will be able to move the Communist negotiators off dead center. He considers the white haired 72-year-old Bruce a "giant" among diplomats.

In announcing his appointment during a televised foreign policy "conversation" Wednesday night, Nixon stressed the flexibility Bruce will have. He said the U.S. proposals are not on a "take it or leave it basis," and there is room for conciliation by the two sides. Nixon hopes the fresh impetus he is giving the talks will make Hanoi more willing to negotiate. Signs so far are negative.

Alos on the foreign policy front, the White House said Friday there are no plans to send a U.S. military force into the Middle East, despite the presence of Soviet pilots in Egypt. The Russians are flying defensive combat missions inside the country.

Presidential Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said the U.S. hopes to arrange a de-escalation of the Russian presence in the Mideast through diplomatic negotiations. But he did not rule out the possibility of a military presence to counter Soviet moves in the explosive area at some future point to protect Israel.

WAR

had been ordered against the Cambodian border "on the same basis as air interdiction missions" to insure the safety and security of U.S. forces in South Vietnam.

The statement followed reports from military sources saying American guns placed at artillery bases near the Cambodian border had fired 1,500 shells into Cambodia in the first three days after the withdrawal.

President Nixon in reporting on the withdrawal of U.S. forces, said American planes would keep flying missions in Cambodia but the statement today was the first formal acknowledgment of artillery also being used. "When specific targets of enemy troops or supplies are within range of our artillery they may be taken under fire to reduce the threat to friendly forces in the Republic of Vietnam and as we have said many, times, we will conduct protective reaction as an inherent right of self-defense whenever friendly forces in the Republic of Vietnam are endangered from positions in Cambodia," a military spokesman said.

AMERICA

Hope and featuring more than a dozen of America's best known movie and TV stars. And of course, the traditional grand finale of a glorious Fourth —a fireworks display.

The weather was hot and humid, as it's supposed to be on the Fourth. But a 50-50 chance of thundershowers hung over the evening festivities.

Throngs of young people paraded toward the Lincoln Memorial before the religious service began to stake out positions on the Washington Monument slopes for the evening gala.

Their attire — ranging from business suits to shorts for the men and hip-snuggling slacks to Indian dresses for the women —gave the crowd a carnival color. Knots of uniformed policemen were everywhere.

At du Pont Circle, favorite midtown haunt of the hippies, all was quiet. A few young persons sprawling on the grass were watched by a dozen or so foot patrolmen.

Sounding the day's keynote, Graham listed seven reasons why Americans can be proud of their country.

"We honor America" he said, because:

"—She has opened her heart and her doors to the distressed and persecuted of the world.

"—She has been the most generous nation in history . . when a disaster occurs any place in the world, America is there with help and aid.

—"She has never hidden her problems and faults. With our freedom of the press and open communication system, we do not sweep our sins under the rug.

"—She is honestly recognizing and is courageously trying to solve her social problems.

"—She has never sought to use her tremendous power to take over other nations.

"—She defends the right of her citizens to dissent.

"—There is woven into the warp and woof of our nation faith in God."

Graham did not mention the Vietnam war. He had said in advance the observance would be "neither pro-war nor anti-war." His one oblique reference to foreign policy was a suggestion that it should be reviewed "to be sure that our objectives and goals are in keeping with the American dream."

America can solve these and other problems he said, if its people will shake off the mood of "discouragement, despair and negativism" that prevails in the nation today, and rededicate themselves to realizing the "unfinished dream" of their forefathers.

Although he upheld "constructive dissent" as "the hallmark of our priceless freedoms," Graham said that when dissent takes violent and destructive forms, it turns into anarchy. He said the overwhelming majority of Americans have watched with mounting alarm "while a relatively small extremist element, both to the left and to the right, have knocked our courts, desecrated our flag, disrupted our educational system, laughed at our religious heritage, and threatened to burn down our cities."

By turning out to honor America today, he said, this great majority is letting the world know that "in spite of their faults and failures, we still believe in the principles and institutions that made our nation great."

BUDGET

budget Thursday and recessed for a long, three-day weekend. The Senate defeated it 25-13, two short of the 27 necessary for passage.

Admittedly impatient, Reagan, appearing at the second such news conference of the week, said that he had "given" as much as he could for schools when he endorsed $102 million in extra state aid as proposed by a legislative budget rewriting committee.

He repeated his contention that school finance in California was a "long-range" problem that "cannot be solved just by another infusion of money."

"No one of us has any idea today of the real need of the schools or whether that need is based on mismanagement of the money now being distributed or whether that amount of money is too small."

He said next January he planned to work toward solving the "long-range" issue and "if that calls for more money we'll face that problem then. And we'll make a decision then as to the amount and how it should be produced."

But the Democrats insisted that the addition of $180 million on top of the $102 million agreed to by Reagan "will not even improve present school problems."

They also asked Reagan's support for a temporary "workload" budget that would operate state government on a day-to-day basis until a permanent budget was approved.

He refused, saying "I think that would simply insure a year-round session of the legislature with no pressure and necessity at arriving at a permanent budget."

Reagan accused the Democrats of "playing with fire" by delaying budget passage and conceded that he expressed "impatience" and "righteous indignation" with the seven Democrats at the meeting arranged by the Senate Gop leaders.

He accused Democrats of describing the issues in "not accurate statements" and said he would sign the budget without using his blue-pencil item veto power if the legislature would send it to him as approved by a second conference committee.

TOKYO (UPI) — David and Julie Eisenhower ate lunch today with the heir to the 2,630-year-old Chrysanthemum Throne of Japan.

The daughter of president Nixon and the grandson of President Dwight D. Eisenhower were driven on this cloudy Fourth of July to the palace in the city's center to meet Crown Prince Akihito, 37, and Crown Princess Michiko, 36, over a two-hour lunch.

Typhoon's Course

TOKYO (UPI) — Typhoon Olga with 85-mile-an-hour winds swept across Okinawa today and headed towards southern Japan.

Air, rail and sea transportation in Okinawa were halted and all government offices and schools closed.

News cables from Okinawa, America's major military bastion in the western Pacific, said some crops and farm houses were damaged.

Recall Short

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — Opponents of Sen. J. William Fulbright, D-Ark., have conceded defeat in their attempt to recall the antiwar senator.

A petition which had to be delivered by Friday to the Arkansas Secretary of State fell 4,500 signatures short of the required 61,500. The petitioners got 57,111 signatures during the six-week long drive.

Miss Universe

MIAMI BEACH (UPI) — Girls from 60 countries have begun gathering in Miami Beach for the opening of the 19th annual Miss Universe pageant.

The girls will first display their charms to the public Sunday during a parade and welcome by city officials.

The Miss Universe competition begins Wednesday night when the judges pick the 10 best swimsuit winners and make awards for the best national costume and most photogenic. Final judging will be held next Saturday night at the Miami Beach auditorium.

Romney Sees Danes

AALBORG, Denmark (UPI) — George W. Romney, U.S. Secretary for Housing and Urban Development, said Friday there would have been no war in Vietnam had the United States followed the Constitution and submitted a declaration of war.

Romney arrived for today's 58th Danish-American independence day rally at Rebild Hills. Some 10,000 persons were expected for the rally led by King Frederik and Queen Ingrid.

At a news conference Romney said the Nixon administration had inherited "this unfortunate war."

Frances Parkinson Keyes Dies At 84

NEW ORLEANS (UPI)— Novelist Frances Parkinson Keyes, who lived in Louisiana most of her life and drew on the old world heritage of the state for many of her 50 novels, is dead at the age of 84.

The prize-winning author, whose career spanned half a century, died in her French quarter home Friday following a lengthy heart ailment.

Among her long list of perennial best-sellers are a number of New Orleans-based stories, including "Dinner at Atoines," "Crescent Carnival" and "Once on Esplinade."

More recently she had turned out a number of highly popular, award-winning novels, including "Blue Camellia," "The Rose and the Lily," and her most recent work, "The Heritage," completed in 1968.

Mrs. Keyes had traveled over the world and lived in various countries, but had made her home in New Orleans since 1942. She was the widow of the late governor of New Hampshire, Henry Wylder Keyes, who was a U.S. Senator when he died in 1938.

Mrs. Keyes was a native of University, Va., but owned homes in Vermont, New Hampshire, and New Orleans.

She held doctor of literature degrees from Bates College and George Washington University, and in 1951 was awarded the doctorate of Humane letters degree by the University of New Hampshire which cited her as a distinguished author and an ambassador of goodwill.

In 1963, she went to Peru, where she wrote her novel, "The Explorer," the book which won her the honor of the Sol de Peru, the oldest honorary decoration in the Western Hemisphere.

From 1923 to 1935, Mrs. Keyes was an associate editor of Good Housekeeping magazine and was an editor of National Historical Magazine from 1937 to 1959.

She was named outstanding Catholic woman in the United States in 1946.

Mrs. Keyes will be buried at her Vermont estate, The Oxbow, in Newbury, Wednesday.

Gottlieb's Ranch: Not God's Acres

SANTA ROSA (UPI) — The Sonoma County Superior Court has ruled that the Morning Star Ranch is not God's little acres, but indeed belongs to one-time folksinger Louis Gottlieb.

And, ruled Judge Kenneth Eymann, Gottlieb must clean up the 30-acre spread within 30 days because it's a mess.

Eymann Friday told Gottlieb he would have to remove the hippie-type structures built on the ranch since the former folksinger with the Limeliters deeded it to "God" last year and opened it to the world's "religious people."

Gottlieb notarized a deed signing title over to God and it was relucantly recorded May 7, 1969 by County Recorder Herbert Snyder.

Judge Eymann ruled the deed invalid, and said the ranch is "unfit for human habitation." and gave Gottlieb until July 30 to clean it up.

When Gottlieb deeded the ranch to the Lord last year, he advised he would continue to pay the taxes on the property.

"It's preposterous to pay taxes for God," he said. "But for God's sake, I'll pay them.

Philadelphia Selected For Anniversary

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Commision set up to plan celebration of the nation's 200th anniversary has recommended to President Nixon that Philadelphia be the site of an international exposition and a July fourth birthday party in 1976.

Philadelphia nosed out Washington, D.C., Boston and Miami for the honor of being the bicentennial host city, but the commission recommended in a report that all three prepare special observances of their own to focus attention on different aspects of American life.

OTHER PROPOSALS

The report by the 35-member American Revolution Bicentennial Commission also stressed that proposals from many other cities for special events would be considered and approved within the next six years.

Recommendations in the 38-page report that four focal-point cities stage elaborate activities "international in scope" confirmed reports that had filtered from commission sources earler in the week.

But other specific recommendations of the commission were:

—Outfitting of a special promotional ship to tour the world and invite visitors from abroad to the anniversary celebrations.

—That Americans be urged to make a "personal project" of learning at least one foreign language in anticipation of a large number of foreign tourists.

TRAVEL PLAN

—Planning by private and public transportation officials to ensure that fast, low-cost travel by 1976, particularly along the east coast where most of the events will be held.

—Special events at the Winter Olympics at Denver in 1976.

The commission recommended that the year-long celebration be called "Festival of Freedom" and focus on three major themes: Heritage '76, Open House USA and Horizons '76.

'Conspiracy' Seen Against Role Of Public Education

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The president of the 1.1 million member National Education Association warned Friday of "a conspiracy" against education and urged teachers to form a political group to combat it.

"There are some experts in America who are predicing that public education cannot survive the onslaughts leveled against it in 1970," George D. Fischer told the association's 108th convention.

"There appears to be a conspiracy at work to destroy confidence in public education, including a hostile federal administration which has in fact declared war on education."

Fischer included President Nixon in the conspiracy. He said Nixon had cut federal education funds on grounds they were "inflationary" despite approving billions for military purposes.

Other enemies of public education, Fischer said, are racist governors, a new coalition of private segregated schools and profit-making businesses offering to teach reading in public schools on contracts promising to raise pupil achievement to specific levels.

Since crucial decisions are made by elected political leaders, Fischer said, "I will not be satisfied until we are the most powerful lobby in the nation."

Through mergers with other groups, the 45-year-old native of Des Moines, Iowa, foresees his organization embracing all the nation's two million teachers in five years. In a decade, he said both the profession and the association will grow to four million.

"We will pay annual dues of one per cent of each teacher's salary," Fischer said, "which will give the united teaching profession one billion dollars a year to elevate the status of educators and education."

Fischer hopes to have a federal law enacted requiring school districts to negotiate with their teachers and legalizing strikes.

Not only should teachers control the schools, Fischer said, but they must share decision-making authority with their students.

"Our young people have asserted themselves as never before, and in ways which tend to completely baffle our adult population, and have even caused the President and Vice Prsident of the United States to disagree.

"At least 80 or 85 per cent of these young people are reasonable and intelligent. They are not bums and hoodlums," Fischer declared.

"I believe that continued denial of this desire for a 'voice' will drive and is driving them over to the ranks of their radical colleagues," he told the 5,000 delegates.

"Although it may be threatening to many of us here to think of students —college or high school or even younger — helping to create the educational program, I think the NEA must take leadership in working out a better way for student involvement."

Israeli Soldiers Wounded In Shelling From Lebanon

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

Three Israeli soldiers were wounded today when their patrol came under small arms fire from Lebanese territory 21 miles north of the Sea of Galilee, an Israeli military spokesman said. The spokesman said the action occurred near Metullah. He said the Israelis returned the fire.

Arab news media in Beirut continued their denunciations of statements by President Nixon Wednesday night which they considered pro-Israeli.

The newspaper Al Bayraz said today, "The next step is to sever Arab relations with the United States."

The head of the Palestine Liberation Organization office in Beirut, Chafic El-Hout, said, "The Arab states should not only liquidate all U.S. interests in the Arab world but should abandon the camp of positive neutrality and become an integral part of the Socialist camp."

In Moscow, however, an authoritative Middle Eastern source said the Arabs had found some positive elements in the latest U.S. peace proposal and that Egypt and the Soviet Union might not reject it out of hand.

HAWK PEANUT BUTTER

200,000 At Rock Festival In Georgia

BYRON, Ga. (UPI)—Hippies colonized a steaming soybean patch in the heart of Georgia early today, hawked "clinical peanut butter and jelly sandwiches," and made love openly amid upwards of 200,000 young people at a frenzied rock festival.

Traffic continued bumper-to-bumper off interstate 75 and thousands still tried to beg, buy or force their way into the plywood enclosure that is the three day home of the Second Atlanta International Pop Festival.

Generally, the program that began Friday afternoon with intonations from an Indian Guru named Yogi Bhajan, proceeded as smoothly as anyone had dared hope.

Motels were reported filled as far north as Tennessee with persons trying to get to the festival area, 100 miles south of Atlanta. In Atlanta, the normally crowded "Hippie Section" of famed Peachtree Street was strangely deserted.

Late Friday night, a thunderstorm broke the heat spell that has lingered for three days, sending temperatures plumetting 30 degrees under the day's high of 104.

One of the Allman Brothers group performing when the torrential rains began falling looked toward the heavens, raised his arms and said evenly, "out of sight," then continued singing.

One bearded, long-haired youth toted a cardboard box under his arm and shoved his way through the immense throng, singing out "get your clinical peanut butter and jelly sandwiches." What made them "clinical" and made the price one dollar, he claimed, was a liberal lacing with LSD.

Other traders hustled drugs despite an undetermined number of state police and security guards sent in by Gov. Lester Maddox not only to promote order, but to keep a check on drugs.

Throughout the crowd—larger in population than any city in Georgia except Atlanta—young males and females undressed and coupled openly on blankets, drawing hardly a stare.

Above them, John Sebastian, B.B. King and Procol Harum Rock Singers blasted out the latest sounds.

Maddox, for his part, deplored the entire festival as "one of the worst blights that has ever struck our state.

"It's really sad, when you think that the people who live there are even afraid to leave their homes," he said. "It's regrettable that we have had a moral breakdown so great that we would have to witness this at our own front door."

Police estimated the crowd at 200,000, and promoters said they had an actual head-count of 157,000. But during the evening, 12,000 to 14,000 persons gathered outside the main gate threateningly until the management agreed to admit them without cost. Others paid $14 for a ticket good from Friday through Sunday.

Shrinking Milk Jugs

SALEM, Ore. (UPI) —The Oregon Department of Agriculture ordered 20,000 plastic milk jugs destroyed because they had shrunk. The jugs, each supposed to hold a gallon of milk, could be filled with only 1½ ounces less than a gallon. Officials say the plastic shrank when run through hot water cleaning cycles at the dairy.

Pope, Lodge In First Meeting

VATICAN CITY (UPI)— Henry Cabot Lodge, the first official U.S. envoy to the Vatican in 20 years, conferred with Pope Paul VI today about world affairs.

The 68-year-old former U.S. Ambassador in Saigon and chief of the American delegation at the Paris peace talks was driven through the Arch of the Bells to the left of the main entrance of St. Peter's Basilica for the meeting with the Pope.

It was their first meeting since Lodge arrived four days ago to take up duties as President Nixon's special envoy, a post which does not entail accreditation as a diplomat to the Holy See.

Jackie Gleason Gets His Wish: Quiet Wedding

ASHFORD, England (UPI)—Jackie Gleason wanted a quiet wedding and he got it today when he married Beverly McKittrick, a 37-year-old former Baltimore secretary, in the small registry office of this town on the outskirts of London.

Only 30 persons, most of them Saturday shoppers who just happened by, saw the 54-old television star arrive with Miss McKittrick in a tan Rolls-Royce to say their vows. Gleason was divorced 10 days ago from his wife of 32 years.

Burglary Case Is Under Study

The case of John Lauren Mott, 18, of San Rafael, accused of burglarizing the DeLong Chevrolet showroom in San Rafael on June 24, has been referred to the probation department for a report on whether he can be tried in Marin Juvenile Court.

He is to return to Marin Municipal Court July 17.

A companion, Barry Royal Hier, 17, of San Rafael, arrested with Mott in the rafters of the agency, was booked into Marin Juvenile Hall.

Probation, Fines In Marijuana Case

Judge Alvin H. Goldstein Jr. of Marin Municipal Court yesterday placed Lester Patrick Pendleton, 23, and Emily Link Killibrew, 25, both of San Francisco, on six months' probation and fined them $75 each for misdemeanor marijuana possession counts.

The couple was arrested Feb. 21 when they were found sleeping in a makeshift tent behind an Inverness summer residence.

Minister To Talk On Black Economy

"Problems of Black Economic Development" will be the topic of the weekly San Rafael Rotary Club meeting Monday at 12:15 p.m. at the West End Villa.

Addressing the Rotarians will be Rev. Eugene Turner, executive director of the office of ethnic church affairs of the Presbyterian Church in San Francisco.

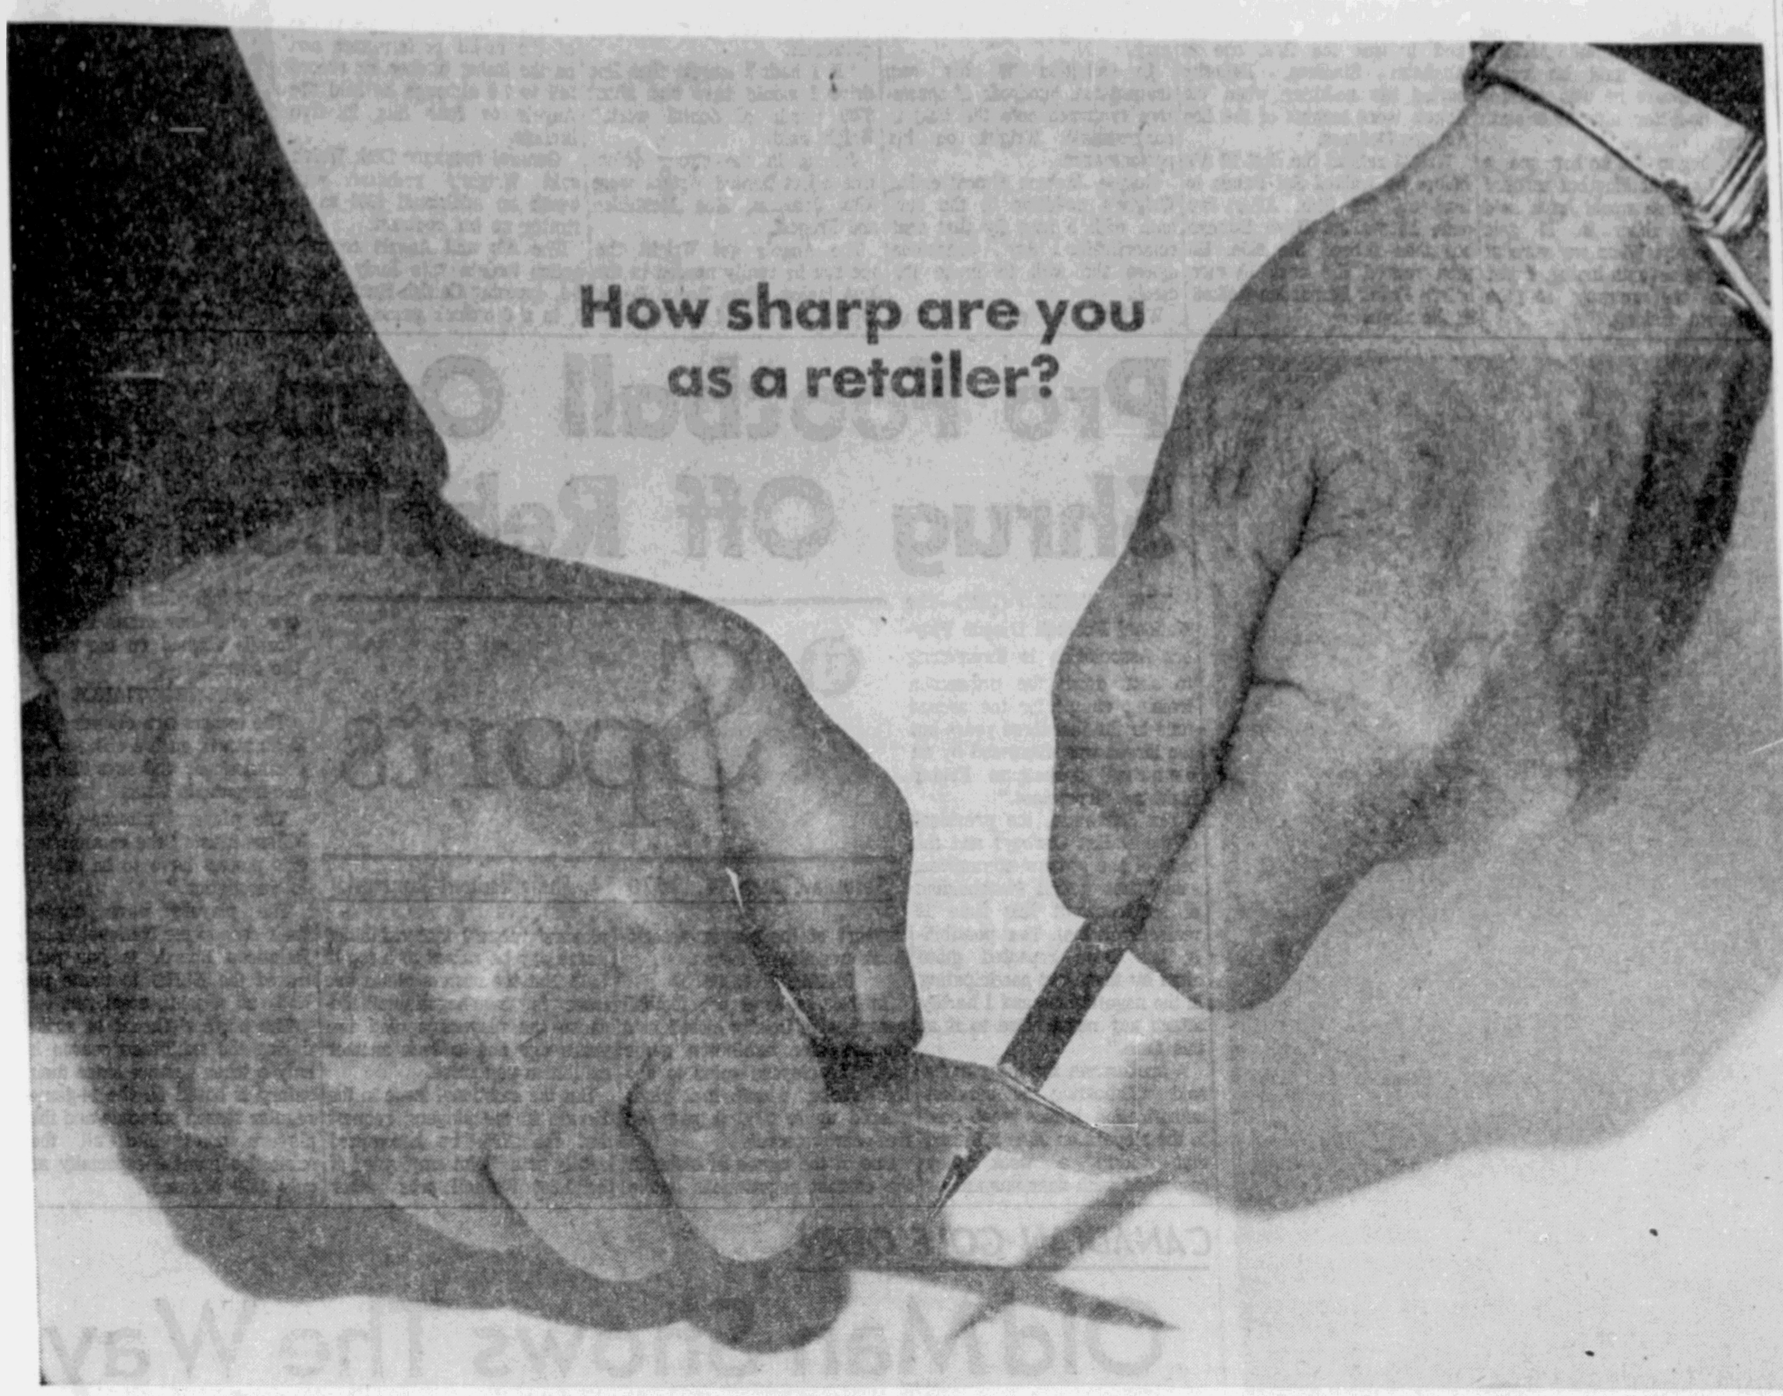
HAZEL



If you don't get the point of this new research*, you're losing customers

The percentages of women planning, shopping and spending for each item in a week are very small.

This finding, from the most complete research ever done on the retail customer, is nothing to brush off lightly. (Unless you want to brush off business).

Let's see what it means: Take women's dresses. Only 7 women out of 100 interviewed in Week I planned to buy a dress soon. In Week II, 5 out of 100 actually shopped for a dress. And only 3 bought. But the ones who bought weren't necessarily among the 7 who planned to buy!

This pattern is true for every item in all stores, except food and drug-sundries (the necessities). The market is fantastically small on any given day, in any given week. It is not a huge, faceless group just waiting for your merchandise.

Take major appliances: the findings show that 16,700 women must be reached to sell every 100 major appliances sold in all stores in town in a week!

And wouldn't you know it? Three out of four items bought by women in the second week of the survey weren't even planned in the first week. So, those who plan don't necessarily buy, and those who buy didn't even know a few days before that they would soon make a purchase decision!

The point is: no store can know when or where women will actually buy. If you're out of the market with your advertising you're out of sight, out of mind. But if you're in, with a consistent schedule of smaller-space ads to supplement your larger ads, you draw this ever-changing, dynamic market to you. You turn "planners" into buyers of your items. And you get the random buyer to become an actual purchaser.

Your ads in the Independent-Journal give you "market command." Because here you reach 70% of all Marin County households. You reach a tremendous audience. And you get immediate response. Just a better way of doing more business. Call your I-J Ad-Man now and make this research work for you.

*"THE RETAIL CUSTOMER"—Research Study by Opinion Research Corp. Based upon 20,764 interviews with women, interviewing each one twice. The most comprehensive survey ever made of the retail customer.

Typographical Error In Jobless Claims

There were 1,050 such claims last month.

Pitching A No-Hitter Can Be A Shaking Experience

ANAHEIM (UPI) — Clyde Wright was in a pitcher's dream of heaven today as he received baseball's acclaim for hurling the first no-hitter in the American League and the second of the year.

The California Angels southpaw reached the pinnacle for a pitcher by hurling a 4-0 no-hit victory over the Oakland Athletics Friday night.

Wright said for a moment he couldn't realize he had achieved a hurler's promised land.

Friday would have been a memorable occasion for Wright anyway. In pregame ceremonies he was inducted into the NAIA Hall of Fame for his undergraduate pitching at Carson-Newman College in Jefferson City, Tenn.

Wright achieved his no-hitter while walking three men and striking out only one batter and the victory gave him a 12-5 record after he had scored only one win last year against eight losses.

The only other no-hitter in the major leagues this year was by Dock Ellis of the Pittsburgh Pirates against the San Diego Padres in the first game of a doubleheader at San Diego.

"There's no way to describe it inside," Wright said when asked about his feelings when he realized he had pitcher a no-hitter.

"It's both an empty and a happy feeling. Then I saw Jim Spencer coming at me and I saw Jim Fregosi with that wide grin of his and I knew I had it."

The hurler said he really became aware he was working on a no-hitter after the sixth inning.

"It began to bother me a little. I saw nothing but zeros. I wish someone would have said something about it. It gets pretty lonely. When we were at bat in the seventh inning, I just sat in the runway to the clubhouse shaking."

Wright required but 98 pitches to wind up the game which took an hour and 51 minutes to complete. It was the first no-hitter by an Angel since Bo Belinsky performed the feat against Baltimore, May 5, 1962, and it was the first one at Anaheim Stadium. Belinsky hurled his no-hitter when the Angels were tenants of the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Wright retired the first 12 A's before he walked Sal Bando to lead off the fifth. After two outs, he walked Dave Duncan but then retired the side. He then retired the next 10 men before Frank Fernandez walked in the ninth.

The crowd of 12,131 was hanging on every pitch but wasn't prepared for the quick conclusion as Felipe Alou grounded to Fregosi who started a game-ending double-play.

Reggie Jackson almost ended Wright's no-hitter in the seventh with a long fly that sent centerfielder Jay Johnstone agaist the wall to make the catch.

Wright, a good fielding pitcher, also aided his own cause by gloving a hard line drive by Dick Green in the third which almost took off his arm and would have been a base hit but for Wright's quickness.

"If I hadn't caught that line drive I would have had about $500 worth of dental work," Wright said.

Joining in the strong defensive effort behind Wright were Alex Johnson, Ken McMullen and Fregosi.

The Angels got Wright the one run he really needed in the first inning when Roger Repoz tripled and scored on Fregosi's grounder. They added three more runs on McMullen's homer in the fourth after Johnson walked and Spencer doubled."

Chuck Dobson was the victim of the no-hit performance and as the losing pitcher his record fell to 7-9 although he held the Angels to four hits in five innings.

General manager Dick Walsh said Wright's no-hitter was worth an additional $500 as a starter on his contract.

The A's and Angels resume action tonight with Rudy May, 4-5, opposing Catfish Hunter, 12-5, in a 6 o'clock game.

GIANTS BITE THE DUST

Giant infielder Bob Heise upset Los Angeles second baseman Jim Lefebvre but too late to avert first inning double play yesterday at San Francisco. The Dodgers, with Willie Davis driving in three runs on a home run, triple and two singles, outslugged the Giants 8-6 in their weekend series opener before 25,330, one of the season's largest crowds at Candlestick Park. Pro Football Owners Shrug Off Rebellion

NEW YORK (UPI)—The National Football League Players Association is threatening to shut down the pre-season training camps for the second time in the last three years but the threat was dismissed by an owners' spokesman Friday night as "irrevelant."

Tex Schramm, the president of the Dallas Cowboys and the head of the owners' committee, said "that action (withholding of services) at this time is really irrelevant. That possibility has been repeated quite often by those not participating in the negotiations and I hardly attach any news value to it at this time."

A spokesman for the players said withholding of services authorization letters were sent to the players on June 25th and that within a week they responded with near unanimous support of the player association's negotiation teams.

BRIEFLY CLOSED

In 1968, several pro football camps were briefly closed in a dispute over exhibition game pay. The players voted to end the strike when the clubs offered up to $350 a year for five-year veterans.

One of the issues at stake in the current negotiations is the players' request that exhibition game pay be raised to a top of $500. But the owners claim this issue is "non-negotiable" because the players agreed two years ago not to seek another exhibition pay raise.

But the emotional issue in the dispute is the players' request that the NFL be recognized legally as a "joint employer" of the 1,800 football pros rather than 26 individual team employers with commissioner Pete Rozelle aligned on the side of the owners.

NON-NEGOTIABLE

The owners are claiming this is an attack on the office of the commissioner and says this is a non-negotiable issue.

The players' attorney, Alan Miller, insists "the commissioner's powers have to be subject to negotiation."

The players have carried their case to the National Labor Relations Board. It has petitioned the NLRB to name the NFL as a joint employer.

The players' threat to strike during the exhibition season is only a token gesture since their salary is based on the 14-game regular season schedule and the players don't like all the exhibition games—especially at only $350 a game.

CANADIAN GOLF OPEN

Old Man Shows The Way

LONDON, Ont. (UPI)—Bob Stone knows about battles—he fought in the Korean War—so he knew when he started that being an "old man" on the professional golf tour it would be a tough fight.

The 40-year old Stone showed his cool on the firing line Friday by shooting his second straight 68 for a 136 total, eight under par, and the lead halfway through the Canadian Open. Trailing Stone by a stroke was former Masters and Canadian Open champion Art Wall, who played the London Hunt and Country Club course in 71 strokes, one under par, Friday.

George Archer, another former Masters winner, was third as his 72 gave him a 138 total, two strokes behind Stone.

Phil Rodgers, Chi Chi Rodriguez and Mike Reasor were all tied at 139.

The two top Canadians, amateur Gary Cowan of Kitchener, Ont., and Toronto pro Al Balding, were tied at 140 along with Jim Jamieson.

The cut was set at 147, three over par. That left 72 golfers in contention for the two weekend rounds, including eight Canadians.

The London Hunt course, a Robert Trent Jones design, was given pin placements for Friday's round that toughened the going considerably. After 65 golfers matched or beat par Thursday, only 45 did so Friday.

Gibby Gilbert, first-round leader with a course record 65, had a 77 Friday. Sam Snead shot an 80 and missed the cut. Defending champion Tommy Aaron had a 71 and also missed the cut after his Thursday round of 77.

Bob Stone, a father of four and in his third year on the tour, played a cool, steady game. For the second straight day he hit 17 greens in regulation. He putted "extremely well," he said.

"Everything was going for me," said Stone, who was in the U.S. Air Force in Korea from 1949-54. "I think the pins were tougher today but I just seemed to hit it closer to them."

A win in the open would be the first official tour victory for Stone. He won the "satellite" Doral Open this year, but his best official finish so far has been a second at the 1969 Azalea.

Stone, from Independence, Mo., knew that heading out on the pro tour against men much younger than himself would be hard going.

"I knew it was a lot of work," he said.

A member at Stone's home club in Independence has sponsored him. So far, Stone has won $30,000 in his three pro touring years. This year, he has picked up $14,000.

First price in the Canadian Open is $25,000.

Bouton's 'Ball Four' Names Real Names

There is a trend in literature today to write what is known as a "Roman a clef." This is just French for "a novel with a key to it," and it is a literary artifice where the supposed fiction is about real people. Harold Robbins got rich on it. "The Carpetbaggers" was about You-Know-Who. It's not hard to tell who Jacqueline Susann is talking about, either.

The style is not important. It's the content that sells the book. You change the names slightly and the incidents not at all. Salacity sells.

The author, Jim Bouton, has taken the art form another step and into a new dimension. He not only uses real incidents in his "Roman a clef," he uses REAL NAMES.

Is that "Mikey Morton" on the roof of the Shoreham Hotel in Washington leading a squad of major league Peeping Toms watching girls undress in various rooms? No, by God, that's Mickey Mantle himself.

Mickey (himself) Mantle gets a lot of other star parts. Slamming the bus window on the hands of kids asking for autographs, showing up so hung over he had to grope for first base on a home run, pushing kids aside, treating reporters like servants. Erich Von Stroheim gets the role if they make it into a movie.

Playing Golf At 4:30 A.M.

Is that Barry Dell whose wife phoned at 4:30 in the morning on a road trip to be told her husband was "out playing golf"? No, sir, our author scorns these little copouts. That's Gary Bell, the real pitcher, himself. His wife's name is Nan.

Now, then, are these a bunch of pseudonymous stars of stage, screen and radio turning a locker room into a Valley of The Dolls — popping pills like chorus girls to keep their courage up? No, doctor, these are the idols of American youth, real-life stars of the American League West, the members of the Seattle-Milwaukee Pilots-Brewers. That's Frank Meriwell taking a pep pill, son.

Is it true what they say about "stews" (airline hostesses)? "Open your door and you're liable to be invited to a party down the hall," says the author candidly. Do ballplayers make good dates? No, admits author Bouton, they tend to treat a girl like a belt-high fastball. Swing quickly and run.

Should Be Called 'Brushback'

Ex-Games Star Held Sets Mark

SAN DIEGO (UPI)—Former Olympian and three-time NCAA champion from Stanford Franklin "Bud" Held Friday set a world record for 42-year-old men in the javelin with toss of 229-3 in the second day of competition at the third annual U.S. Masters Track and Field championships.

Held, who was a member of the 1952 U.S.Olympic team, got his record breaking toss in the Masters Six event—a sextathalon consisting of the javelin, shot, long jump, mile, 100 and 440 events.

Held, who won the Masters Six with 3,438 points, topped the old mark of 228 feet by Germany's Emil Werlding.

In the 200 for men over 40, Richard Stolpe, 45, Corona Del Mar (Calif.) Track Club, set a new national mark with a clocking of 23.3.

In the 100, former 400-meter Olympian George Rhoden, 43, Northern California Seniors Track Club, San Francisco, was the winner with a 10.4 timing, while Stolpe, was second with the same clocking.

Meanwhile, in the mile, Jim Van Tatenhove, 40, Seniors Track Club of Los Angeles, set a meet record in 4:31.8.

Clay Exhibition Stirs A Controversy

CHARLESTON, S. C. (UPI)—The promoter of the scheduled six round sparring session for deposed heavyweight boxing champion Cassius Clay Friday said the controversial match is "definitely on."

Promoter Reggie Barrett said no "harassment" is expected for the July 9 exhibition match between Clay and New York City boxer Jeff Merritt.

At least one attempt to prevent the match has failed. A group of five persons in the Charleston area sought to bring a legal case to prevent the fight, but dropped the matter when they were advised that South Carolina state law forbids only prize fighting and does not cover the planned sparring match.

"My advise to those who don't like this fight is to simply stay home and forget it," said Barrett.

"Having Cassius Clay is no more a disgrace than many other things around here," he added.

BOXING CHARITY

Proceeds for the match, to be held at the 4,000 seat county hall, will go to a local boxing charity for underprivilged children, many of them black. Clay will receive only expense money for his appearance.

The match has drawn national attention as it marks the first time the 28-year-old Clay has stepped into a ring in more than two years. He is free pending an appeal on his 1968 conviction for draft evasion.

"Clay has agreed to do this benefit for our fund-raising program," said Barrett. "The contracts are signed and we're ready to go as scheduled."

COOL RECEPTION

Some members of the Charleston news media have given the match a rather cool reception and little advance publicity.

"That's all right with me," Barrett said. "I just don't want them trying to stir up controversies and create more problems. After all, I am within the laws of the state. I have a city license and I have rented the auditorium."

A letter to a Charleston newspaper labeled the match "a shame and disgrace to every Charlestonian."

City officials have remained silent and have indicated they have no intention of seeking to prevent the match.

TV SHOWING

Barrett said Friday the American Broadcasting Co. is planning to tape the fight for replay on the ABC "Wide World of Sports" program on Saturday, July 11.

He said he expects the fight to be a sellout.

"I've had letters from people and community organizations from both Carolinas and Georgia who want to see the match," said Barrett. "Some well-known celebrities from New York have also written me about coming, but I'd rather not say who at this time."

Ten amateur matches will precede the Clay-Merritt exhibition. Prices for the exhibition are scaled from $6 to $10.

No, The Phillies Aren't Cheating

PHILADELPHIA (UPI)—Are the fifth-place Phillies cheating?

That was the impression given fans at Connie Mack Stadium after Friday night's game when plate umpire Bob Engel ordered the ground crew to measure the pitching mound. The inspection was strictly routine.

"All fields are checked from time to time by the National League," explained Larry Shenk of the Phillies' publicity office. "The umpires check the distance, the height and the slope of the mound. We came through with flying colors."

Flag Is Illegal On Baseball Suit

BOSTON (UPI) — American League umpire Ed Runge ordered an American Flag put away Friday night during the Red Sox-Indians game at Fenway Park, even though it was the eve of the Fourth of July

Runge said he wasn't opposed to displaying the flag, but it violated baseball rules concerning uniforms.

Sohner Softballers Rally To Victory

Sohner Tree Service softballers of Marin County scored five times in the seventh inning to gain a 6-3 verdict over Flying Goose Sporting Goods of San Francisco last night in San Francisco.

Sohner righthander Jess Munyon limited the losers to two hits.

Kentucky Derby Executive Dies

Knebelkamp, the silver-haired former president of Churchill Downs who became known as "Mr. Kentucky Derby," died Friday of a heart attack. He was 69.

A friendly good-will ambassador for the Derby, Knebelkamp served for 11 years as president of Churchill Downs before he turned the reins over to Lynn Stone last Dec. 31 and entered semi-retirement in the role of a consultant to the track.

Tennis

SAN JOSE — James Connors of Los Angeles was the only Californian to advance to the semi-finals Friday in 18-year-old boys' singles at the California Junior Tennis Championships. Connors, who will join UCLA's championship tennis team next year, defeated James Hagey of La Jolla, 6-2, 6-3 in quarterfinals action at the San Jose Swimming and Tennis Racquet Club.

Baseball

OAKLAND — The Oakland A's have announced the signing of righthanded pitcher Alan Griffin of Hermosa Beach, Calif. The lanky 18-year-old Griffin will report to the A's farm club at Coos Bay, Ore., in the Northwest League.

At Mira Costa High School this year he posted a 1.10 earned run average and struck out 52 batters in 41 innings.

Auto Racing

WATKINS GLEN, N.Y. — Mario Andretti of Media, Pa., and Jacky Ickx of Belgium have been named to drive one of two factory Ferraris in the six hours of endurance for the world championship of manufacturers auto race July 11 at Watkins Glen.

The six hours will "green flag" an international road racing doubleheader with the Glen Can-Am "200" following some 26 hours later on July 12.

Pro Basketball

INDIANAPOLIS — Roger Brown, high scoring forward for the Indiana Pacers, is spending the Fourth of July holiday in a hospital recuperating from knee surgery. Brown, who scored 98 points in two crucial playoff games when the Pacers won the American Basketball Association title, had surgery Thursday for removal of a sac between the tendon and bone in his left knee.

Motorcycle Racing

SAN JOSE — Defending national champion Mert Lawwill of San Francisco is among the favorites in Sunday's American Motorcycle Association race at the Santa Clara County Fairgrounds. Other Californians in the 10-mile championship battle over the half-mile dirt oval are Jim Rice of Palo Alto and Dick Mann of Richmond.

Boxing

MEXICO CITY — Jose Napoles, the world welterweight champion, will make his next title defense in November against Johann Orsolics of Australia. Promoter George Parnnassus of Los Angeles, representing Austrian promoter Wieler Stathalle, said the Cuban-born champion had agreed to meet Orsolics Nov. 12 in Vienna.

pulent," it's Joe Cronin, the name he was born with. The book is called "Ball Four." It should be called "Brushback."

It's not a Book-of-the-Month Club selection. It nowhere resembles Bruce Catton, or "Stonehenge Decoded," or the "Girl From Fitchburg" or "The Key to Feminine Response in Marriage." It's not even an alternate-choice with book dividend given.

Like most literary departments, it has driven the critics to paroxysms of fury. The usual lace-cuff, deft reviews ("Subtle," "Charming," "Shows the writer's master of allegory," or "A tribute to the human spirit," or "Comes to grips with the basic ills of our time") are passed over in favor of "Spy!," "Violates privacy!," "Meretricious!," "Entrapment!" Baseball writers as critics, tend to run more to "Kill the umpire!" rather than the "Shows promise but needs editing" persuasion.

At A Literary Tea Level

I bearded the author in the locker room at Dodger Stadium the other night. I wanted to keep the discussion at a literary tea level and do not indulge in vulgar personalities. "I, er, I thought it had Dickensian dimensions. The part about Mickey, er, What's-His-Name? Reminiscent of Sydney Carton. Oliver Twist. Nicholas Nickleby. Overtones of 'Kafka,'" I murmured. (That's what you're supposed to do in conversations with authors.)

"Yes." said the author. "I just didn't want to write another Golly, Gee-Whiz sports book, y'know?"

"Well," I said hastily, "you certainly avoided THAT. You centainly got well away from the Louisa Mae Alcott-Burt L. Standish-Ralph Henry Barbour school. I do feel you showed some Truman Capote influence. A smattering of Updike. The kissing scenes on the back-of-the-team bus. Have you thought of it as a musical? 'The Boys on the Team' sort of thing?"

"It's a best-seller," offered Bouton, hopefully.

I winced. "Please," I said. "Please don't put yourself on a vulgar plane with Susann, Robbins, Wallace and those other potboilers. You have pioneered new directions in literature. We'll call it the 'Knuckleball School of Writing.' No more 'My Life at Bat' by Home-Run Harrigan. Your next book should be titled 'The Unofficial Scorer.'"

Marin Cars To Race At Sonoma

Bill Castagnaro of Sausalito and George Pridmore of Tiburon will be featured in the national championship Sonoma Summersport auto races July 11-12 at Sears Point International Raceway.

Castagnaro and Pridmore both have filed for the major point race, the only national sports car event set for Northern California this year.

Both will see action in the Production H race with Castagnaro at the helm of an Austin Healey Sprite and Pridmore set for the wheel of a Formula Ford.

A total of eight races have been planned for the weekend by the Sports Car Club of America with drivers bidding for a place on the California team to run in the All American Racing Championships planned for Texas in late fall.

The weekend speedfest shows four races set for Saturday starting at 2:30 p.m. and four events on the program for Sunday. Qualifications for each race will be held beginning at 10 a.m. each morning.

Tickets are on sale for the Sonoma Summersport at Sears Point, at all Macy's, Ticketron and Sears stores.

Chinese Gal Steals Show In AAU Track

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—Chi Cheng of Nationalist China and U.S. Olympian Barbara Ferrell clash today in the sprint finals of the 47th annual National AAU Women's track and field championships and world records could result.

Miss Chi, competing for the Los Angeles Track Club, in Friday's preliminary events broke the 220 yard world record and equalled the recognized world mark in the 100.

The shapely Cal Poly of Pomona star ran the 220 in 22.6, three-tenths of a second under the listed record and one-tenth under her own pending mark of 22.7. In the 100 she won in 10.3 to equal the mark she shares with Marlene Mathews Willard of Australia and Wyomia Tyus, but three-tenths slower than her own pending mark set June 13 at Portland, Ore.

NO TROUBLE

Miss Ferrell won her sprint heats in 10.4 and 23.5 without too much difficulty.

In other top performances, Beth Bonner, Morgantown, W.Va., set a new national record of 9:48.1 in the 3,000 meters. The old mark was 9:54.4 set by Doris Brown of Seattle earlier this year.

The Atoms (N.Y.) Track Club team of Michelle McMillan, Shelley Marshall, Gale Fitzgerald and Sheryl Toussaint broke the American record in the mile relay with a mark of 3:44.5. The old mark of 3:46.2 was set by the same group earlier this year.

MEET MARK

Mayor Daley's Youth Foundation team of Kathleen Jones, Willye White, Mamie Rallins and Maeoper West set a meet mark of 1:43.5 in the 800 medley relay.

In the 880 yard run Terry Haul of Knoxville, Tenn., Track Club won her heat in 2:06.8. She was followed by Miss Toussaint of the Atoms T.C. in 2:06.9. Francie Johnson of the Michigans won the other heat in 2:09.4.

The Kissing Bandit In Trouble

PASADENA, Calif. (UPI)—Exotic dancer Morgana Roberts, the kissing bandit who has bussed major league baseball players on diamonds from coast-to-coast, has pleaded innocent in municipal court to two counts of indecent exposure.

The buxom Miss Roberts, who measures an estimated 42-22-36, failed to gain custody, however of a snake and a puppet used in her dancing act.

The puppet and reptile were taken as evidence by police when she was arrested last Friday and Monday on suspicion of indecent exposure. The charges stemmed from her performances at two clubs, according to court records.

Miss Roberts has chased and planted kisses on the Reds' Pete Rose in Cincinnati, Clete Boyer of the Braves in Atlanta, the Senator's Frank Howard in Washington, California's Billy Cowan in Anaheim, and most recently the Dodgers' Wes Parker in Los Angeles.

Court Dismisses Water District Fish Kill Case

A criminal charge against the Marin Municipal Water District stemming from the killing of about 3,000 fish was dismissed yesterday in Marin Municipal Court when it was reported the company has purchased between 7,000 and 8,000 fingerlings for restocking.

Deputy Dist. Atty. Peter Mitchell also said that the company has installed machinery to correct problems which caused a broken line from which alum poured into Lagunitas and Paper Mill creeks in Samuel P. Taylor Park. The fishkill occurred in April.

Mitchell said that the baby fish had cost the water district $1,730.

The company had been charged with a section of the fish and game code which makes it a crime to discharge substances harmful to fish into creeks.

Aaron's Sub Goes On Homer Spree

By NEIL HERSHBERG
UPI Sports Writer

San Diego manager Preston Gomez chuckled after glancing at the Braves' lineup and noticing that Mike Lum was playing in place of Henry Aaron. But Lum wound up getting the last laugh.

Lum, a reserve outfielder of Chinese-Hawaiian extraction, hit three home runs Friday night to pace Atlanta to an 8-1 victory over the Padres in the first game of a twi-night doubleheader. The Braves took the nightcap 9-4 on homers by Rico Carty, Aaron and Orlando Cepeda.

Lum, who entered the game with a career total of five homers, was playing in place of Aaron, who is third only to Babe Ruth and Willie Mays in lifetime homers with 577.

But Lum had a perfect night as he hit a two-run homer in the second, walked with the bases loaded in the third and hit solo homers in the fifth and seventh innings to drive in a total of five runs, only one less than he had driven in all last season. The homers "erased all doubts about my ability to hit the long ball," the 25-year old Lum said. "It sure renewed my confidence."

MORE HOMERS

In the second game, Carty, who also hit a homer in the opener, hit a three-run drive, his 20th of the season, in the first inning. Aaron hit a two-run homer, his 24th, to highlight a four-run second inning, and Cepeda hit a two-run homer, his 14th, in the fifth.

In other National League action, Pittsburgh outslugged Chicago 16-14, New York downed Philadelphia 4-3, St. Louis defeated Montreal 9-7, Los Angeles beat San Francisco 8-6 and Cincinnati and Houston divided a doubleheader with the Reds winning the opener 3-0 and the Astros taking the second game 10-4.

In the American League, Kansas City swept a twinbill from Milwaukee 5-3 and 4-3, Minnesota tripped Chicago 8-2, Baltimore blanked Detroit 4-0, Washington edged New York 4-3, Boston took both ends of a doubleheader from Cleveland 2-1 and 5-4 and California, behind Clyde Wright's no-hitter, beat Oakland 4-0.

WILD GAME

Gene Alley capped a three-run ninth inning rally with his second homer of the game as the Pirates beat the Cubs in a wild game featuring eight homers and 40 hits.

Pinch-hitter Donn Clendenon singled in two runs in the ninth inning to lead the Mets to their win over the Phillies. Ray Sadecki allowed seven hits in eight innings to pick up the victory.

Lou Brock hit a three-run homer and Richie Allen added a two-run shot in the Cardinals victory over Montreal which snapped the longest winning streak in Expo history at five games. Brock's homer highlighted a five-run second inning and Allen's homer, his 22nd, came in the seventh inning.

The Astro's erupted for four runs in the sixth inning and went on to their victory over Cincinnati after the Reds won the opener behind Gary Nolan's five-hit pitching. The Astros pounded five Red pitchers for 12 hits in winning the nightcap while pinning the loss on Tony Cloninger. Tom Griffin went the first five innings to pick up the victory.

BOWLING TIPS

By MARION LADEWIG

A too-high backswing is infrequently an answer for achieving additional ball speed. In fact, this "ceiling reach" often causes women bowlers to lose their balance on the downswing. No wonder. Having the ball come down below shoulder level for best from such a height would shake anyone. During the backswing keep the ball at or results.

"Who says a sailboat has to cost more than $695?"

In knocking around the racing circuit for years, I've seen a lot of people who were interested in a small sailboat but at board boat prices. Preferably a one-design racing class boat, complete with sails that can be handled by a beginner, but still challenges the experienced sailor. "It can't be done," I said. I'm Dick Reid.* Then one day while languishing off the pace in one of the national races, I thought "Why not?" So I developed the Banshee. In all modesty this little masterpiece has it all... one design racing class, planes easily, can be carried on your car, and cost only $695! Look over the specifications. You'll see why the Banshee has to be one of the best boat buys you'll ever make.

*Flying Juniors built by Dick Reid captured 4 firsts and 2 seconds in the last 6 national championships.

Underlining Sheer Fabric Gives Body To The Garment

By EUNICE FARMER

DEAR EUNICE,

I am making a sheer dress of polyester and cotton mixture. This dress has a 12-gore skirt. The gores begin at the yoke just below the neckline. Should I line this dress or will it be too heavy with all the gores lined?

MISS A. H.

DEAR MISS A.H.,

"Whether to line or underline" that must be the most asked question I ever get from my readers. Once again I must tell you that there is no set rule for either fabric or pattern, but both must be taken into consideration. Underlining gives a little more body to any garment. How much body depends on the weight of the underlining fabric. A separate lining doesn't change the line of the dress; it simply eliminates the need for wearing a slip. In your case, there would be no special rule; it would depend entirely on the effect you wish your dress to achieve. If you wish it to fall in soft folds from the many gores, do not underline it. Since it is sheer fabric, however, you may wish to add a separate lining so that your dress will look like the same color throughout.

If you wish this same dress to have a shaped-A-line appearance with a crisper look, by all means underline each section. Treat the two layers as if they were one and proceed with your construction. For the past few years we have underlined almost everything.

Now, with softer fabrics making their appearance and more fullness in the bodices and skirts, perhaps we will get away from underlining to a degree. I have always felt that underlining keeps the garment from wrinkling and adds to its general appearance.

MRS. FLOYD Lindberg, McKeesport, Pa., is winner of the Tailor Trix pressing board this week for her suggestion:

"When a belt that matches your dress is just a little too short for comfort, I add about an inch of elastic to the buckle end. When worn, this doesn't show because it is covered by the other end of the belt extension, and it really works out fine."

To all my readers: Please gather together your helpful little hints and send them to me. They may be simple and old to you, but there are always new sewers today who really love new ideas. Besides, you might be one of our lucky winners of the Tailor Trix pressing board. Just send your winning suggestions or sewing tips to Eunice Farmer, in care of the Independent-Journal.

DEAR EUNICE,

Recently a question came up about top-stitching the edges of a collar. Before top-stitching the collar looked fine, then, after it was applied and was top-stitched, it rolled up at the ends. Did the top-stitching cause my collar to change its appearance?

MRS. R.R.L.

DEAR MRS. R.R.L., No, your top-stitching had nothing to do with the way the collar rolls. This could be stitched before applying the collar or after the collar was applied. The only reason you didn't notice the fact that your collar didn't roll properly before it was top stitched was that the facing, perhaps, rolled out slightly in order to make the top collar slightly larger. By top-stitching, the facing couldn't peek out anymore, and consequently your poor constuction. showed.

In order for a collar to roll beautifully, you must realize that the top collar must be slightly larger than the undercollar. After you have stitched, clipped, turned and pressed the outer edges of your collar, roll it over your fingers just as it will be applied to the neckline of your garment. Don't try to keep the neck edges even. Pin through all thicknesses of your collar just below the seamline at the neck, holding this extra fullness in position — now apply to your garment. The seam allowance of your undercollar will always be 5/8 inches; the top collar seam allowance might vary depending on the thickness of your fabric. The neckline facing will cover up any variation in the width of the seam allowance. This is the only way you can be sure of always having a collar you will be proud of. Incidentally, this is one of the easiest "give-aways" of that homemade look in sewing, so by all means perfect this technique. You'll be amazed at your results if you haven't used this little magic trick.

DEAR EUNICE,

When lining a suit, what is the purpose of sewing the sleeve linings in separately by hand? It's so much trouble and doesn't make much sense to me. I've also noticed that on ready-made suits and coats, the sleeve linings have been sewn by machine to the coat lining, then the whole lining stitched into the coat.

MRS. H.H.

DEAR MRS. H.H.:

Sewing the sleeve linings in by hand has many advantages: the body of your garment is lined first, the lining fits perfectly to this area. You permanently baste the lining around the armholes to keep it in position, also permanently basting the underarm of your lining to the underarm seam of your garment. Then the sleeve linings are pinned in place, allowing for the ease at the cap of the sleeve. Slip-stitch the sleeve lining in place at the seamline.

We must never compare a custom finished garment with a factory made garment. Production costs are so high that the techniques employed to put a garment together must be the best for the least amount of money. When you sew, it is wonderful to have so much pride in your garment that you would like it finished as beautifully as if it was an original garment tailored individually for you.

Set-in-sleeves take perhaps more skill than any other operation in dressmaking. If you would like a copy of "All About Sleeves" by Eunice Farmer, please send 10 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Eunice Farmer, in care of the Independent-Journal.

Thousands Of Letters Say Midis Are Already Gathering Dust

DEAR HELEN

My mother works in the business office of one of the major department stores. She says the word has gone out that midi will not be in this fall and winter — too many women against it. So this store and others in its chain are stocking only a few — and expecting a higher than average rate of return. Buyers say skirts will go down an inch or two but not drastically.

Thought you'd like to know that we girls can win if we put our minds to it and complain together. By the way, how many votes against the midi-length skirt did you finally get?

CALIFORNIA GIRL

DEAR CALIFORNIA:

I gave up counting after 10,000, but I'm still getting petitions that carry over 500 names and addresses each. . .And also letters from various parts of the country reporting that stores have returned their midi stock because it gathers dust on the racks. H.

DEAR HELEN:

A boy asked why girls buy boys' pants. Simple: They're long enough. I can't understand why manufacturers underestimate the modern female leg. I'm 5 feet 5½ inches, which is average, but because I'm slender, the girls' pants I try on hit me above the ankle. If I get the extra-longs they bag in the seat. Why can't they design long pants for slim girls? — SLIM JANE

DEAR SLIM:

The least they can do is give us a three-inch hem. And this goes for dresses too. In these days of uncertain lengths, the skirt which has an ample hem won't scare prospective buyers away. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

I'm 13 and my mother refuses to let me close my bedroom door when I have kids over.

When you and your girl friends want to talk, you like privacy. She thinks I'm trying to shut out the rest of the world. What do you think? — JOYCE

DEAR JOYCE:

Your mother is the boss, so I can only tell you that our daughters have the same right to close their bedroom doors as we do — and when a door is closed at our house, one knocks before entering. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

I had to write this letter to anyone who resents his or her mother. I once had a mother to talk to, but when my parents were separated, I spent many nights crying in my pillow, while I stayed with my aunt. Dad was a problem drinker. He finally got back on his feet and tried to make it up to my brothers and sister and me.

In the meantime, I learned my mother was moving to Michigan, over a thousand miles away. More tears on the pillow. I had a big decision — stay with my Dad who needed me or go with the rest of the family. I had to turn on one or the other, but if everybody left Dad, he might go back to drinking.

It hurts — having no mother, no brothers, no sister near me. I'd give anything to come home from summer school tomorrow to see my mother, even if she hollered at me. I'd love to find my "bratty" little sis, my "smart-alec" brother, my "miserable" 10-year-old brother, and my little Denny waiting for me — even if I had to babysit them.

If there are kids out there who think they don't need anybody, well they're not even fooling themselves. — STILL CRYING

P.S. Right now I still have something wonderful: My father is the best there is.

London Express Service

LONDON — Rolling Stone Mick Jagger has lost little time in filling that gap in his life caused by the transference of Marianne Faithfull's affections to Irish Peer Lord Rossmore.

Marianne, 23, and old Etonian Lord Rossmore, 39, are expected to announce their engagement shortly. Meanwhile, Jagger's affections have been diverted to 19-year-old New Yorker Patti D'Arbanville.

Miss D'Arbanville, who came to London from Paris two years ago to buy some clothes and decided to stay on, met Jagger two weeks ago.

Since then they have been inseparable. She has even taken an apartment almost next door to Mick's in Cheyne Walk.

Patti, who has modeled for top international photographers Richard Avedon, Bert Stern and Patrick Lichfield, has just completed her first leading role as an actress.

"Mick is so exciting but at the same time so peaceful to be with. We don't have to go anywhere exotic to enjoy life," she says.

Crash-Protection Air Bags Get Volpe Push

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Transportation Secretary John A. Volpe says he will push for mandatory installation of crash-protection air bags in all cars sold in the United States after Jan. 1, 1973.

Volpe said the life saving potential of the devices makes their widespread use "more than justified." Automobile industry spokesmen have claimed they need more time to stuly the proposal, but Volpe told members of Congress Thursday "I intend to push this important safety advance to the utmost and welcome your support."

WINNING BRIDGE

By Refusing First Heart Trick South Can Score 4-Spade Victory

The latest figures from the medical profession show that nine million people were punched in the nose during the fiscal year ending June 30. Not all of these required medical attention, and some of them were gin rummy players. But my sacred oath as a reporter compels me to reveal that quite a few of these bashed beaks resulted from a bridge player's haste in winning the first trick.

GOES T OACE

West led the ten of hearts, East put up the king, and South took the ace at once. South had lost an ace 15 years earlier, and he didn't want it to happen again.

South drew four rounds of trumps and then wondered which ace to knock out. He'd have been safe, and his nose would have been untouched, if he had led clubs, but he actually went after the diamonds.

East took the ace of diamonds and led the jack of hearts. West overtook with the queen and continued with the nine of hearts, forcing South to ruff. This was safe because South had discarded a heart from dummy on the fourth trump.

NO CLUB TRICK

Now South was out of trumps. When declarer eventually got around to leading clubs, West took the ace of clubs and two good hearts.

South could have made his contract by refusing the first heart. He wins the next heart, draws trumps and leads a diamond. East takes the ace of diamonds but cannot continue the attack because he is out of hearts. South keeps his last trump and can thus safely knock out the ace of clubs.

FROM LESSON

You probably remember this kind of play from your no-trump lessons. You often refuse the first trick when you have two stoppers in the enemy's suit. You have two stoppers here also, except that one of them is a trump. The principle is the same.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes.

You hold:
♠ - J 4 2
♥ - 7 5 3 2
♦ - K Q J
♣ - J 10 6.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two hearts. The raise of a major suit is slightly more encouraging than the response of 1-no-trump. If partner has a long, but broken trump suit he may need only a promise of trump support to bid a sound game.

Using Cars Deserved Penalty, Judge Says

OAKLAND (UPI) — Welfare workers who used Alameda County cars to attend an employes' rally for higher wages deserved a three-day suspension, a Superior Court judge has ruled.

Judge Lyle Cook, who upheld the Board of Supervisors action Thursday, said the seven employes should search their consciences "to determine if their action inspired public trust in county government."

THE FLOWER OF ATLANTIS

The single flower that has graced Sausalito's controversial drydocks (right) may transform itself into a gigantic wooden lotus blossom if the backers of Project Atlantis have their way. Plans to turn the educational-creative center were announced this week by Sausalito drydocks into a cultural- sculptor Christopher Roberts, who owns the structures, and Gate Five Design Institute Inc., the group which plans to design and carry out construction of the center. Their plans call for rearranging the drydocks so that open ends face on water on all four sides (below left). The blossom-like frames (below center) would be added, the frames filled in and stain glass windows added (below right), and $2 million later, the center would be open for business. All that is needed to make their dream come true is the $2 million and permission from the Marin County Board of Supervisors and the City of Sausalito. County Counsel Douglas J. Maloney, however, said the county was not giving up its long-standing legal fight for removal of the drydocks from Richardson Bay.

Fair Nearing Finale

As attendance surpassed 15,000, the 25th Marin Art and Garden Fair headed into a holiday weekend windup today.

Yesterday's total brought attendance thus far to 15,741, compared with 13,419 last year. A Thursday attendance figure of 45,044 supplied the Independent-Journal was incorrect and should have read 4,544. Also, attendance for the second day last year was not 46,049, as reported to the I-J yesterday, but 4,649.

Fair gates will be open until 10 p.m. today. Activities will include barber shop singing, at 7 p.m., and a performance by the Pacific Ballet at 8:30 p.m.

The schedule:

TONIGHT

7 p.m. — Barber shop quartet, Marin Chapter, Society for Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet singing in America.

45 Acres Destroyed In Grass Fire

A grass fire possibly started by children playing with matches charred 45 acres of remote land in Novato yesterday, requiring the Novato Fire Department to request aid from other Marin County departments.

Fire Chief Jack Kidder said the blaze was spotted at 11:16 a.m. in a remote area off Carnoustie Drive. Six of his units fought the fire, assisted by 40 men from Hamilton Air Force Base, a bulldozer and tool truck from the Marin County Fire Department and a plane from the U.S. Forest Service which made three chemical drops.

In addition, a unit from the Kentfield Fire Department stood by at the main fire station to handle other fire calls, Kidder said.

"Because of the remote location, we couldn't get our trucks close enough," Kidder said. "We had to hand carry all our equipment in."

By 2 p.m. the blaze was under control and mop-up crews left the scene at 9 p.m. An investigation of the fire was to be made today, Kidder said.

Tam Trustees To Hold Special Meet

The Tamalpais High School District board will hold a special meeting at 7:30 p.m. Monday to discuss rearranging the district office facilities before its regular meeting at 8 p.m. in the board room.

The board also is to act on several resolutions empowering the new superintendent, Wilber D. Hawkins, to act for the district. Business Mgr. Frank Cassou will report on the building program and on priority lists for maintenance and repairs of school buildings for the summer.

BEST PLACE TO VIEW FIREWORKS

The best place to view the Larkspur-Corte Madera fireworks display at 9:10 p.m. today is the vacant lot next to the Bon Air Shopping Center, according to Larkspur Fire Chief William C. Shurtz.

He said that last year so many tried to drive into the Piper Park area that some missed the show because of the resulting jam. The park is across Corte Madera Creek from the empty lot, Shurtz said.

EXPERIENCED SESSIONS

'Center For Human Potential' Set

A summer "center for human potential," consisting of five lecture-discussion meetings and a series of group experience sessions, is being sponsored by the Marin Community Mental Health Center.

The group sessions will start Monday with a meeting for teen-agers at 7:30 p.m. in the Newman Center, 850 College Avenue, Kentfield. The teen sessions will be held each Monday under the general title "As You Like It for Teens," with the young people to help decide the form and activities to be explored. Plans include psychodrama and group dynamics, according to Connie Lashbrook, mental health educator coordinating the programs.

Other group sessions will be aimed at families, couples, single adults, women, and the "cross-generational groups.

Aim of the sessions is to "help people focus their energies," said Michael Kaplan, who will lead several of them.

"A lot of potential is tied up in human beings," Mrs. Lashbrook said. "We want to help make lives mean more than they do, by helping people zero in on some of their problems . . . help them identify their strengths and resources."

The lecture-discussion meetings, to be held at 8:15 p.m. at the mental health center, will start July 15 when Marc Pilisuk, a professor of community mental health, will speak on the impact of American foreign policy on personal life.

Rev. Edward L. Peet, minister of older persons at Glide Memorial Methodist Church in San Francisco, will speak July 22 on mobilizing senior power.

A "Community mental health drama session" will be held July 29 by the center staff to share concerns and ideas for better mental health services to the community.

On Aug. 5, mental health worker Michael Adams will talk on "The Pre-draft Dilemma," when advice and suggestions will be offered to draft-age men.

Child psychologist Joan B. Kelly will talk on August 12 on promoting mental health in children.

Another group session, "Mobilizing Personal Potential," will start at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at the center with Dr. George Wilson, Pat Fenson, Jeanine Gisvold, Josephine St. John and Norman Woodbury as staff. The session will meet each Tuesday through August 4, and participants will be introduced to psychodrama, art encounter, and other methods to work on self-development.

On July 16, a session titled "On Being a Woman" will start at 9 a.m. at the center, led by Mrs. Lashbrook and Phyllis Watts. The sessions will explore woman's role in society, family and careers, and will meet each Thursday morning through August 13.

On July 14, the cross-generational group will meet at 8:15 p.m. at the center. Other sessions are set for July 21 and August 4. The center staff will direct the sessions with people of all ages invited to speak on their concerns to people of other generations.

"Family Day" will be an all-day session from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Aug. 14 at the center, with Kaplan and Mrs. Lashbrook leading. Discussion will investigate how each member of a family meets his wants and needs. Families are to bring a picnic lunch to share.

A weekend session for couples, "Learning the Rewards of Genuine Partnership," will be conducted by Kaplan and Mrs. Lashbrook Aug. 15-16, for couples who wish to develop better skill in communicating and reacting to each other.

A "singles workshop" is scheduled from 5 to 11 p.m. Aug. 20 for all single persons over 25. A picnic supper is planned and discussion will center on human relationships.

Regulations On Public Meetings To Be Discussed

A proposal to establish regulations governing public meetings, assemblies and parades in public places will be discussed by the San Rafael City Council at its meeting at 8 p.m. Monday at city hall.

A proposed ordinance requires a permit and sets certain restrictions on public gatherings.

The council will also open bids on the purchase of road materials for the 1970-71 fiscal year and hold a public hearing on a planning commission recommendation that certain property be rezoned from single family residential to planned community district.

Since it has not yet approved a budget for the current fiscal year, the coundil will consider a resolution authorizing payment of any salary increases retroactive to July 1.

Assailant Takes Woman's Purse

A Sausalito woman was thrown to the ground and her purse stolen by an unidentified assailant last Saturday night, Sausalito police reported yesterday.

Margaret Georgetti of 40 Cazneau Avenue told police she was walking up a path to her home about 11:40 p.m. when a man, about 6 feet tall, 190 pounds, wearing a white T-shirt, knocked her down, grabbed the purse and ran.

The purse contained no cash, police said, but did hold credit cards.

Twin Cities Select Citizens Of The Year

Shirley A. Walker was named Corte Madera's citizen of the year and Donald A. Denton was named Larkspur's citizen of the year yesterday as the twin cities opened their annual Fourth of July celebration.

The two were presented plaques by Donald A. Beacock and Gilbert Dubuc, presidents of the Corte Madera and Larkspur chambers of commerce, at last night's family pizza party. They were to ride in the Fourth of July parade today.

Mrs. Walter, mother of six children and a registered nurse, has taken part in the Twin Cities Co-operative Nursery School, is president of the Larkspur-Corte Madera School Parent-Teacher Association, a member of the Corte Madera Park and Recreation Commission, Redwoods Presbyterian Church, the Chapman-Montecito Homeowners Association and the Larkspur-Corte Madera Fourth of July Committee.

Denton, nominated by Larkspur Fire Chief William C. Shurtz, has lived in Larkspur for 40 years, has been an active member of the volunteer firemen since 1937, and is also active in other civic organizations. Shurtz referred to him as the type "who devotes his entire life to the protection of life and property. . .with no compensation for his dedication as a volunteer fireman."

KUALA LUMPUR (UPI)—Thailand has joined Singapore in barring entry of youths with the appearance of hippies.

'Son Of God' Starves To Death In Jail Protest

BELLINGHAM, Wash. (UPI)—A Canadian youth who said he was the "son of God" starved himself to death in a jail here as a protest against a 30-day sentence for illegal entry into the United States.

Authorities did not notice the serious condition of Robert L. Guest, 22, London, Ont., until early this week. He was taken to a hospital where he died Friday of malnutrion and dehydration after the 23-day hunger strike.

Guest, who signed a document "the son of God," told a federal marshal upon his arrest June 12 that he "was on a trip when he saw God and was given the message to come to the United States."

One Man Missing In Boat Collision

NEW YORK (UPI)—One man was listed missing when a charter fishing boat with 50 persons aboard partially sank after colliding early today with a freighter in dense fog near the mouth of New York Harbor.

The U.S. Coast Guard reported the 80-foot fishing boat "Tampa III" was "under water but visible" after colliding with the freighter "Morma Glen," owned by the Moore-McCormack Lines of New York, about 3:15 a.m. EDT. All but one of the 50 persons aboard the fishing vessel were rescued, the Coast Guard said.

Finnish Births Drop

HELSINKI (UPI)—Fewer Finns were born in 1969 than at any time since 1934, population experts says. The officials said about 68,000 babies were born last year in Finland, compared with more than 78,000 in 1968. In 1934 the total was just under 68,000.

Belvedere Council To Study Flood Problem

The Belvedere City Council will consider a report on flooding problems on the Tiburon Peninsula when it meets Monday at 8 p.m. at city hall.

Prepared by the Tiburon-Belvedere drainage study committee, the report asks that the city councils of Belvedere and Tiburon review and adopt the immediate and long-range recommendations it contains.

In other business, the council is to consider a salary schedule and operations budget contained in the city's proposed $333,390 spending program for 1970-71 and a citizens' request to establish later hours for rubbish collection.

Two months in the making, the drainage study identifies three drainage basins on the peninsula and recommends ways of alleviating winter flooding in each.

For the Reed basin, which extends from Red Hill north to Richardson Bay, the study asks a program of examining and clearing existing catch basins and drain pipes to increase their efficiency; stabilizing the soil on Red Hill by dressing and planting, and establishing trash racks above Reed School to catch silt.

Long-range plans call for construction of a closed flood [illegible] channel along the east side of Tiburon Boulevard.

Boutique Burgled

Cash, clothing and jewelry of undetermined value was stolen Monday night from the Storm Center Boutique, 2631 Bridgeway, Sausalito, police reported. Marjorie E. Vogt, an employee of the shop, told police entrance was gained by throwing a rock through a large plate glass window.

For the Tiburon basin, from Red Hill to the southeastern end of the peninsula, the report recommends continuing maintenance of existing facilities; flapper gates on outfall lines to prevent the intrusion of tidal water from the bay, and a system of pumps and lines to discharge water to the bay.

Recommendations for the Belvedere basin, which includes the east side of the island, are for a silt trap on Laurel Avenue to protect Belvedere Lagoon; a channel for water from San Rafael Avenue to drain into Richardson Bay instead of into the lagoon, and an eventual closed line along Laurel Avenue.

No cost estimate on recommended improvements was given in the report, but the committee did suggest several methods of financing, including direct ad valorem taxes, an assessment district, a capital improvement bond issue, or a cost-sharing agreement between the cities, landowners and the Reed School District.

Senator Decries Pilferage Cost To U.S. Shippers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Thieves are taking about $850 million worth of goods a year from docks, airport cargo terminals and hijacked trucks.

Sen. Alan Bible, D-Nev., put this estimate on the value of stolen goods after listening to two days of testimony at Senate Small Business Subcommittee hearings.

Bible said the pilferage and hijacking were at critical levels "which harms the businessman while making the public pay crime-inflated prices."

The senator broke down the annual losses this way: $700 million worth of cargo stolen from trucks, $100 million at seaport docks and warehouses and $50 million at airports.

CHARLES D. STOKES
Founded seminary

Korean Pastor Will Preach At Mill Valley

Rev. Charles D. Stokes, founder and professor of Taejon Methodist Seminary in Taejon, South Korea, will speak tomorrow at 9:30 a.m. at the Methodist Church of Mill Valley. Camino Alto and Sycamore, according to Pastor George P. Carter.

Rev. Stokes will tell of his work in training men and women for ministry and service in rural Korea. He arrived from Korea Friday for a year's furlough.

In 1967, while on a tour of Korean mission stations for Heifer Project, Inc., Pastor and Mrs. Carter met Rev. and Mrs. Stokes and visited the seminary. Several members of the Mill Valley church have supported the seminary's scholarship fund through donations.

The seminary was founded in 1954 in an abandoned Buddhist temple in the downtown area of the city. More than 500 have been graduated from the seminary and are doing Christian work. Most are pastors, wives of pastors, teachers or engaged in work with orphanages and other social services throughout South Korea. The seminary now has 150 students, including 30 who plan to graduate in the newly established music education department.

Mrs. Stokes, has been a missionary teacher in Korea since 1954. She works with the kindergarten training College, a junior college, at the seminary and with women at the prison in Taejon.

Dr. Stokes, an ordained minister of the United Methodist Church, was born in South Carolina, but was reared in Korea. He returned to the United States where he attended Asburn College and Theological Seminary, receiving degrees in 1936 and 1938. He received his Ph. D. degree from Yale University in 1947. For two years prior to going to Korea he was pastor of churches in North Carolina.

Saigon Pastor To Talk At Hamilton Air Base

HAMILTON AIR FORCE BASE — Rev. James Humphries, pastor of Saigon's Trinity Baptist Church, will speak tomorrow at Protestant worship services at 9:30 a.m. in Chapel No. 2 and at 11 a.m. in Chapel No. 1.

Hamilton will be Rev. Humphries' first stop in the United States after four years of missionary service in Vietnam. Mr. Humphries is an accredited newsman for Baptist Press and will speak from first-hand experience on "The Two Wars in Vietnam."

He worked closely with the chaplains at Tan Son Nhut during his stay in Vietnam. Rev. Humphries frequently attended the evening "Country Church" service at the base. Many men also attended the services he held at the Trinity Baptist Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Humphries will be staying at the home of Chaplain L. H. Miller during his stay. He will be speaking throughout the East Bay area. Friends may call at the Miller home.

During the May, 1969, Viet Cong attacks on Saigon, Rev. Humphries was driving to one of the Baptist chapels which had been hit by enemy shells. He hoped to help evacuate the student pastor and others who might be in the building.

But about 100 yards before he reached the chapel, he was caught in crossfire between opposing forces. Humphries jumped out of his car and ran for cover in a nearby building.

"I had often wondered what my reaction would be at such a time," the missionary recalled in a recent sermon. "Now I know! I was scared. Fear was real. Yet there was within me such a calmness and peace of heart that my fears were insignificant."

Witnessing for Christ in such times of peril is difficult, but it is not impossible, Humphries told his congregation at Trinity Baptist Church, Saigon. The church is made up primarily of U. S. servicemen.

Despite sometimes having to brave sniper fire to attend church, the constant danger of a grenade being thrown into their midst, and the inability to hold night services for a year, they were able to record a baptism ratio of one baptism for every five church members.

Rev. Humphries recalled a statement which Baker J. Cauthen, Executive Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, made last fall to a group of 95 missionary appointees undergoing orientation at Ridgecrest, N. C., Baptist Assembly, "You're going deliberately where the storms rage, but you will not be so much aware of the storms as of Jesus Christ. So go ahead and unpack your bags."

In the midst of Vietnam's peril, Rev. Humphries concluded, the missionaries' bags are unpacked — and will not be packed again until "God tells us to go elsewhere."

Baha'i's In Marin To Join In Rites

Baha'is in Marin County will join members of the Baha'i Faith throughout the world in observing the 120th anniversary of the martyrdom of The Bab, Prophet Herald of their Faith, with special prayers in gatherings throughout the county on Thursday.

The Bab was executed at noon, July 9, 1850, in Tabriz (Persia), for having proclaimed a new code of religious laws, according to Baha'i followers. The Bab promised the coming of another Prophet 19 years later, and in 1863 one of his chief supporters declared himself to be that Prophet and was titled Baha'u'llah, which means Glory of God.

Presbyterians To Hear Guest

D., assistant professor of New Testament at Westminster Theological Seminary in Philadelphia will be the special minister tomorrow at 6 p.m. in The Orthodox Presbyterian Church of Novato. The public is invited.

The local pastor, Rev. Robert H. Graham, will preach at the 11 a.m. service on "Christian Patriotism."

SUCCESSOR TO ATHENAGORAS?

Illness Stirred Speculation

By JOHN RIGOS

ATHENS (UPI) — The recent recovery to good health of Patriarch Athenagoras and his return to Istanbul as the senior Greek Orthodox prelate has put an end to some agonizing speculation on a possible successor.

The 84-year-old churchman flew to Vienna in April for treatment after medical experts feared he was suffering from cancer. It developed this was not the case, but while he was undergoing treatment there was some hectic behind-the-scenes activity in Athens, Istanbul and New York to put forward candidates to succeed him.

The Greek Orthodox community of the United States is the largest flock directly administered by the patriarch through an archbishop.

Athenagoras served 18 years as archbishop of the United States, before his election to the ecumenical throne in 1948. His election came at a time when Greece and Turkey were boosting their anti-Communist stances through such American political programs as the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan.

Subsequent political events, however, especially the thorny problem of Cyprus, has made the position of the patriarchate in Istanbul more difficult than at any time in nearly half a century.

In 1922, it was feared the holiest See in Greek Christian orthodoxy, established in Istanbul in 330 A.D. when Constantine the Great moved his government from Rome to Byzantium, would be expelled from the Turkish city. A war between Greece and Turkey forced the Greek population of Asia Minor - about 1.5 million persons - to flee to Greece itself.

Through the treaty of Lausanne in 1923, the patriarchate was spared, and so were the Greek inhabitants of Istanbul together with those of the Greek islands of Imroz and Bozcada, both of which were ceded to Turkey.

This Greek-Turkish congregation has dwindled over the years from a quarter of a million to about 20,000, with reductions especially acute since the anti-Greek riots in Istanbul in 1955 and the Greek-Turkish confrontations over Cyprus from 1964 to 1967.

Many members of the patriarchate hierachy also have been expelled for "anti-Turkish" activities.

The holy synod of the ecumenical patriarchate consists nowadays of 10 metropolitans-that is, residents of Isanbul-with 60-year-old Metropolitan Meliton of Chalkidon the most prominent. He is possible heir to Athenagoras.

Meliton seems to be acceptable to the Turkish government and has the backing of the Greek government.

Turkish support is the key because the government has a veto right over the election of a patriarch.

New York-based Archbishop Iacovos of North and South America, the largest community outside Greece and the most involved in the ecumenical movement, appears to be well qualified to lead the orthodox church one day. But the Turkish government, according to diplomatic sources, is unwilling to accept another Athenagoras-type patriarch.

The Turks were opposed to Athenagoras' overtures towards the Roman Catholic church and very reluctantly permitted the patriarch to travel to Jerusalem and Rome in 1964 for meeting with Pope Paul VI.

Athenagoras and Iacovos are equally disliked by many of their colleagues for their faith in ecumenism.

Greek officials also are not enthusiastic about another patriarch who takes his ecumenical role as seriously as Athenagoras, which mitigates against Iacovos.

It's a difference in viewpoint that is troubling the church and deeply concerns Patriarch Athenagoras.

NEW YORK (UPI) —Two big Lutheran denominations have reported membership decreases for 1969.

For the first time since it was organized 10 years ago, the American Lutheran Church reported a decline in baptized membership during 1969 to a total of 2,559,588, compared with 2,576,105 at the end of 1968. Confirmed membership, however, increased 4,381 during 1969 to a total of 1,771,999.

Leader Says 2 Million Baptists In Russia

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary says there are more than two million Baptists in the Soviet Union.

Dr. Duke K. McCall said, "It's not wise for religious leaders to advertise publicly the growth in their church membership (in the U.S.S.R) and they know it."

The church claims about 510,000 Baptists in Russia, but McCall said there are many more than that figure.

Success Hasn't Changed Michael Caine

By WAKA TSUNODA
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Caine looks at the menu and rubs his nose with the knuckles of his big, thick hand. "What is saute?" he wants to know.

When success came to this freckled-faced Cockney whose ancestors toiled for more than two centuries in London's Billingsgate fish market, Caine declared: "I've had 35 years of not having any money and I would now like, in all justice, fairness and decency, to have 35 years of absolute luxury—and if I can possibly get it, I will. But if I can't I won't shoot myself. I'll shoot somebody else."

He won't have to shoot anybody. Now, four years later, his career continues to soar. His latest film is "Too Late the Hero," with Cliff Robertson; another film, "A Last Valley," is awaiting release; and he is set to begin another.

THINGS ARE going so well that he has calmed down, somewhat.

"Yes, at one time I was concerned with living a life of luxury. Not now. I have freedom from worry about money. This is good. But I'm not sumptuous; I'm modest in demands. I don't think success has changed me much. When it came, I had set my ways and thoughts. You just grow older and wiser."

His blond hair is slightly long, and he wears an ascot with a suit.

SOMEONE HAS said that he is so concerned with his virility that he wouldn't dare go to the manicurist and he'd probably cut his nails with kitchen scissors. He laughs. His upper lip curls up lopsidedly and his sleepy eyes get sleepier behind the black-rimmed glasses.

"No, I don't quite do that. I don't try to project any image. I stay natural, except trying to be well-mannered. People say, 'Oh, you actors are always acting.' I say, 'I do acting for lots of money. How could you be so conceited as to think I'm acting for you for nothing!'

"I don't do pushups like old time movie stars to develop muscles. I don't even exercise. I'm lazy, you know?

"BUT MAN ought to be man, and women ought to be women. I find this women's liberation movement very strange. It is strange because it is flourishing in the country where women are the freest of any country in the world. It's a contradiction. American women spend more money on pills, psychoanalysis, stimulants and depressants than on food. They ought to leave the psychoanalysts and go back to their husbands and children. It all went too far in America. Do you know how English women won equal pay? By persuading male union leaders and not fighting against them, not being aggressive or belligerent. I'm old fashioned, you know."

MICHAEL CAINE
'I'm old-fashioned'

"You know" is his favorite punctuation.

Then, talking about his career, he says:

"I THINK I will wind up as a director. I want to be a director in order not to be an actor when I'm old.

"There is nothing more sad than growing fat and bald in front of the public and having to go to Switzerland for facelifting. I want to grow old behind the camera. How old is old? Oh, 50 years."

"ONCE A director said to me, 'When you see the girl, really raise your eyebrows. She is so beautiful.' I said, 'Why not cut to the girl and if she's beautiful the audience will raise its eyebrows. Then cut to me and I'll do nothing, but it will look like I'm raising my eyebrows.' "

A waiter brings with reverence a dish of sauteed liver. "Ah, good. That's for me," he says.

He has found out what "saute" means.

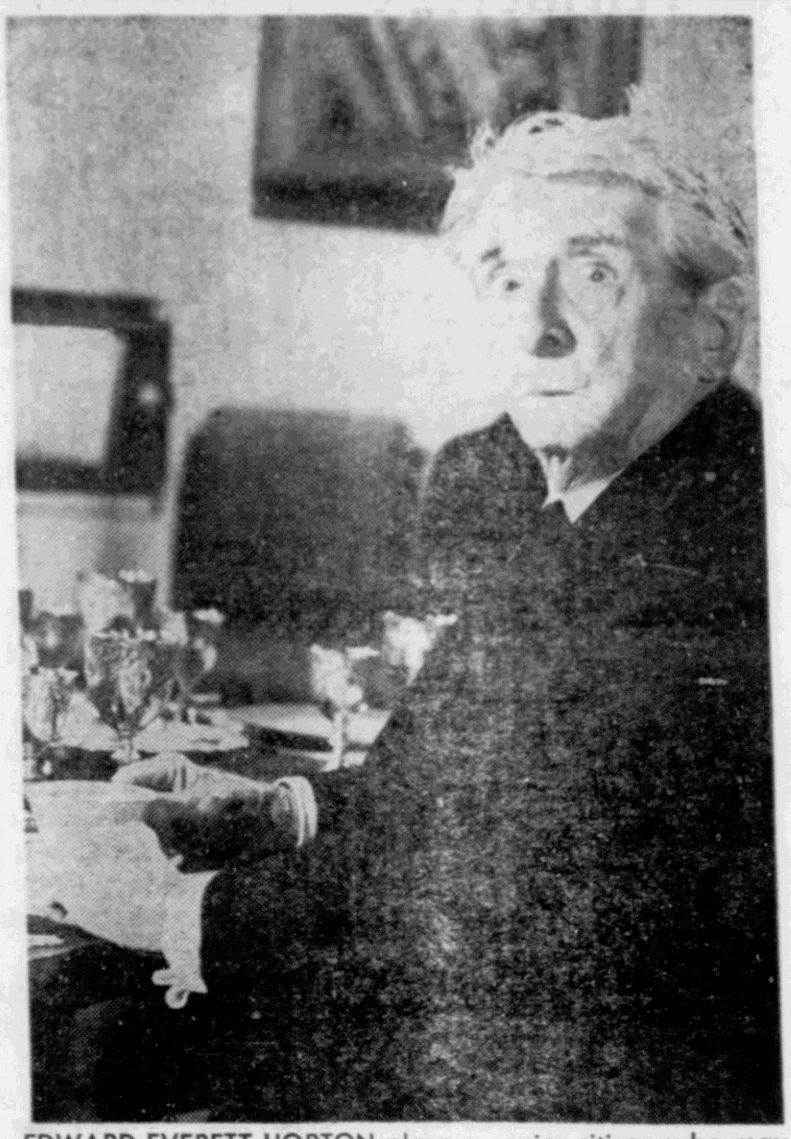
New Faces In Virginian

It's a ninth season coming up for NBC's "The Virginian," and there will be some changes in the fall.

James Drury remains in the title role, and Doug McClure continues as Trampas. Movie star Stewart Granger becomes the new owner of Shiloh ranch, succeeding John McIntyre, who succeeded Lee J. Cobb.

Lee Majors of the late "Big Valley" series becomes a new ranch hand who will alternate with the others as central figure in the episodes. The time element will be advanced about a decade, into the mid-1890s.



EDWARD EVERETT HORTON plays a senior citizen who may have clues to the whereabouts of the missing wealth of a deceased millionaire in "Island of Gold and Precious Stones," an episode on "The Name of the Game" series to be colorcast Friday at 8:30 p.m. on Channels 3 and 4.

On The Stereo Scene

Some New Releases By Capitol

By JOHN SUNIER

THE SONS — Capitol SKAO-332:

One of several excellent rock ensembles who are strongly influenced by jazz, the Sons of Champlin were one of the best of the so-called "second generation" of rock groups in the San Francisco area. They changed their name to "The Sons" for this LP, and I understand in the time it's taken me to plough through a big stack of albums to review, the group has changed their name again.

Anyway, the seven longhairs are cooking, whatever they call themselves. One is reminded of Blood Sweat and Tears on such tracks as the opening "Love of a Woman," as well as "Boomp Boomp Chop," with its explosive reeds and swinging electric organ.

GOOSE CREEK SYMPHONY — Capitol ST-444:

This is another new group hailing evidently from Arizona, of all places. Like a number of other recent groups, they are embarrassingly similar to The Band in their blend of rock and country. However, though I can't admire them for originality, I love The Band and therefore dig this LP mucho.

EARL OF RUSTON — The Salvation Co. — Capitol ST-465:

Earl Woods was a country singer from Ruston, La., who died last year. The Salvation Co. has assembled a most touching musical memorial to him that strikes me as one of the best-realized "theme" LPs since Sergeant Pepper. The songs are charming and the nostalgic feeling truly affecting.

OUTTA SEASON — Ike and Tina Turner — Blue Thumb BTS5:

The dynamic duo, Ike and Tina, have appeared in this area frequently lately and they are terrific in person, I understand. This LP's cover, with the pair in whiteface eating watermelons, is striking, to say the least. The tunes are real rockers delivered in their high voltage but always musical style. "Dust My Broom" was my favorite.

THE ORIGINAL DELANEY & BONNIE — Elektra EKS 74039:

Delaney & Bonnie are a really enjoyable pair in the white-singers-who-sound-black bag, with a bit of country and gospel thrown in for good measure. They are featured against a sizeable backing group and even small chorus.

Tops of the 10 tunes for me was "When the Battle is Over."

TRUCKIN' WITH ALBERT COLLINS — Blue Thumb BTS8:

The album title pretty well says it — the contemporary blues idiom is Collins' bag and he does it in his own way, without imitating the "kings" of the guitar. The concentration is on instrumentals in this collection and most of them groove like mad. Though re-channeled for stereo, the sound is fine.

EDWIN HAWKINS AND THE HEBREW BOYS — Buddah BDS 5047:

The leader of the famed Edwin Hawkins Singers ("Oh Happy Day") has taken some talented young men from his larger group and formed this gospel vocal group. Using contemporary rhythms and harmonies, they deliver God's message with zest and joy. While the LP lacks the thrilling "spread" of all the young voices in the large choir, it still deserves listening and appreciation.

MORRISON HOTEL — The Doors — Elektra EKS-75007:

The latest Doors LP features more of Jim Morrison's readily-identifiable lyrics and vocals. Among the high spots are "Roadhouse Blues," which adds some other musicians including even a harpist and "Waiting for the Sun," a good Morrison tune. However, a certain sameness pervades the LP.

Perhaps the Doors are also being victimized by the push to turn out records even if there's not enough really great material to do so on such a frequent basis.

THE PRESIDENT

In a position of power,
At the crossroads
Of history,
Weighing statistic
And probability;
All the hope
Of this world
Upon his shoulders,
So he feels
Like Atlas,
But lesser than a God,
Like the Sequoia, Sempervirent,
Waiting and acting
Upon the internal,
Seeking rings of time,
Influencing space,
And energy of nature
Around his sphere,
External branches,
Roots in ground,
Holding firm the soil
Of the nation;
Fires burn,
And have not destroyed
The serendipity
Of which we sprang,
Parts and purpose,
Whorls of creation;
Feel for him,
This power borders
Upon despair,
It is most human
To error, in
Directions which we take.

POINT REYES STATION — C. B. GEARHART

WHAT SEEK YOU FROM LIFE

What share have we in a tomorrow
From what source is there to borrow
An endless parade of days?

From what source is man's fate knit
That he would, in councils, sit
And plan tomorrow's ways?

Man's choice is not his to make
His choice is but to take
His brief unknown tomorrow.

Spend not your life in sorrows deep
Nor your joys perpetual keep
There are but four seasons in a man.

Know not man how short his span
Let man to know, as well he can
The unforgivingness of time.

CORTE MADERA — F. ILIFF SCHOFIELD

ADVICE TO BRIDES

Man can not live by bread alone:
Give him daphne for his soul!
When he asks, give not a stone,
Man can not live by bread alone.
Then how about an ice-cream cone?
Or breakfast on a sunrise knoll?
Man can not live by bread alone:
Give him daphne for his soul!

A Forty-Years-Ago Fourth Of July

The Noisiest Day Of The Year

When Exploding Fireworks, Burnt Fingers Marked Fourth

By JACK FALLON

If you feel you are on the borderline, here's a one-question test to determine to which side of the generation gap you belong:

What is a Spit Devil?

If you hazard the guess that it is one of the many exotically named rock music groups, you belong on the youthful side of the age abyss.

But if you reply without hesitation that the Spit Devil is — or was — one piece in the fireworks arsenal with which Americans formerly celebrated their Independence Day, then you are starting to get a bit long in the tooth.

ALL OF WHICH is likely to cause older generation Marinites to shake their heads at the ignorance or innocence of the younger generations that have grown up in the county since fireworks were banned, and to begin recalling what Fourth of July celebrations were like "when I was a boy."

And their juniors, in turn, will shake their heads and say: "There he goes again."

Better though that they show a bit more tolerance of their elders. After all, memories and nostalgia are just about the only values left to us gray hairs that have survived the wear of time and the effects of inflation.

SO — WHEN I was a boy, the Fourth of July was like this:

It was preceded always by a three or four-day intra-family war of nerves marking the period between the purchase of the fireworks and the arrival of the holiday.

Daily, hourly, more frequently, parents were badgered: "Mom, (or dad), can't I shoot off some of those Chinese crackers?"

The inevitable reply: "No. I told you that you would have to wait until the Fourth."

"Not even one?"

"No, not even one."

"Then how about a sparkler?"

"No, not even a sparkler. Now you get out of here and quit pestering me."

SO THE DAYS and hours dragged by, and finally the big morning arrived. It was no morning for sleeping. At dawn, the barrage began. And we three boys were always among the earliest participants.

By breakfast time, we had made heavy inroads into our supply of firecrackers, which was considerable. Our weekly allowances through the year were never more than modest. But twice a year, whether on the rosy 1920s or bleak 1930s side of the depression, at Christmas and at Fourth of July time, dad always found the money for a better than proper celebration. Not just dimes and quarters, but whole dollar bills had been expended upon an assortment of pyrotechnics — for striped or fire truck red three-inch salutes, for the medium-sized Chinese 'crackers, for the packets of tiny Lady Fingers, for the Torpedos you threw, and for the Spit Devils you ground beneath your shoes.

Held in reserve for night-time were the skyrockets, the Roman candles, the bombs, the pinwheels and all the other display pieces.

AFTER BREAKFAST and after lunch (more often referred to as dinner in those days), the bombardment continued. Little girls winced and held their ears. Dogs howled mournfully. Mothers bound burnt fingers with bandages. And the air grew acrid with the smoke and smell of burning gunpowder.

There was the inevitable contest to see who could blow a tin can the highest by placing one of the big salutes beneath it, then touching it off.

And there was the just as inevitable occurrence, usually about mid-afternoon, when three small brothers realized suddenly that they had used up all their firecrackers and punk.

A consultation with dad would follow. Mother would inquire, although already knowing the answer: "Joe, you aren't going to buy them any more firecrackers, are you?" And he would reply: "Well, maybe just a few more, Alice. You know the Fourth of July comes but once a year." And she would add: "Thank goodness."

And up town we would go to find a fireworks stand still open. And the "few more" usually turned out to be as many packages as the dealer's depleted stocks could supply. Then back home and a resumption of the bedlam.

THERE WAS, of course, other Fourth of July family traditions besides the firecrackers.

Annually, dad would buy a case of soda pop which would be kept on ice in a tub on the back porch. And whereas such treats were strictly rationed during the year, the only limits on the Fourth were the appetites and capacities of small boys. There would be grape (always a favorite and quick to go), strawberry, lime, cherry, orange and all the other flavors, including root beer, usually one bottle of watery chocolate, and something called cream soda that was not too popular.

There was brick ice cream, too, which we wrongfully considered superior to the home-churned product of the freezers upon which less fortunate neighbors relied. The drug store's supplies ran almost exclusively to vanilla, chocolate and strawberry, but once in awhile there was black walnut as well. And that was an occasion for celebration in itself.

The staple food for the Fourth — and for most other holiday and special occasions — was fried chicken, although community celebrations usually featured barbecued beeves.

Sometimes the main meal of the day was a picnic — eaten in the countryside, not the backyard. And if so, then the chicken would be accompanied by some of mother's wonderful potato salad and baked beans and no doubt a home-baked cake, all washed down with the soda pop. Of course, for dad and any uncles who might be along, a few bottles of beer would float among the soft drinks. And before repeal marked the demise of really good beer, it would be his potent homebrew that dad bragged was "the best on the block."

If the meal were eaten in the home, then corn on the cob was a traditional accompaniment for the chicken. And whether eaten indoors or outdoors, there simply had to be iced watermelon or it wasn't the Fourth of July.

VERY MUCH A part of the Fourth of July observance, too, was the 48-star American Flag that dad hung carefully right after his breakfast from the front porch — in those days there were simply front porches and back porches, not entrances and patios — and which he took down immediately after the evening meal.

For the most part we provided our own entertainment, although there are recollections of ball games, band concerts and rodeos during the day. The era of the big Fourth of July parades in our community was largely past. Politicians, even as now, were still ready and eager to deliver their patriotic and windy orations, but few had the inclination to listen to them. Only the reassuring voice of FDR had any meaning for the working man, and his words came to us over the radio where he dealt with hard facts like unemployment and sagging farm prices, not the traditional but hollow-sounding Fourth of July histrionics.

Sometimes there were public fireworks displays in nearby communities, and we would drive out into the country, park a few miles away, and enjoy the sky show from afar.

BUT THE REAL high point of the day was the Fallon family fireworks display from our own front yard. This usually began shortly after 9 o'clock.

Dad did the firing of the pieces (somehow, during the day he had managed to wander out into the yard "just to see if the boys are behaving" often enough to shoot off a goodly share of the firecrackers as well.) The family, usually joined by relatives and by neighbors who enjoyed pyrotechnical displays but were too smart to spend their own hard-earned money on such momentary pleasure, watched from the porch. Occasionally an older son was permitted to leave its safety to touch off a pinwheel, a duty he performed with great pride.

All along the block, other families had gathered on their front porches to watch "those crazy Fallons" blow up their money into fire and smoke, some because they liked the show, and others because they wanted to make sure an errant skyrocket didn't land on top of their roof and set the shingles afire.

ROMAN CANDLES huffed and puffed their colorful belches, skyrockets screamed and left their fiery paths, pinwheels whirled madly, bombs burst resoundingly. And each year dad lamented that "they didn't have any of those really big skyrockets like they used to make."

The biggest rocket was always saved for last, to mark a climax to the show. After which, the smaller kids brought out their sparklers and had the stage to themselves for awhile.

Sparklers gone and a few children whimpering with singed fingers, the boys then brought the festivities to their close by shooting off the last of their supply of firecrackers. The street rang with the reports of the big salutes. Until finally the last cracker exploded and there was silence. And the older neighbors could shake their heads in relief and retire for the night, knowing that the mad Fallons had finally brought their annual day-long binge of noise and color to a close.

MOTHER WAS fixing a before-bed snack of cake and ice cream for one and all. Dad was having second thoughts about all the money he had blown on now vanished 'crackers and other fireworks and vowing he would not go overboard the next year (but he would). The kids were recalling eagerly the events of the day, and regretting it would be a full 12 months before another Fourth of July rolled around. And Muggs the dog, who had spent a good part of the last 18 hours under the porch, would begin to show some of his old self-assuredness!

Well, maybe. At least it seems that way in retrospect.

But one forgets all the burns and the near mishaps to the eyes. And the time one of our Roman candles set the Wilson house across the street afire and began a nasty neighborhood feud that lasted for years. And the lady down the street who lost her grandson one Fourth when the lad died in the California town in which he lived when some imbecile threw a cannon cracker into the fireworks stand where he was working and turned it into a death trap. Or the many made miserable by the din. Or the money that went up in smoke at a time when many households were hard-pressed for food and rent.

FIREWORKS including the biggest skyrockets that could be found, touched off by father in the front-yard, climaxed the Fourth of July celebration of the late 1920s and 1930s, as remembered by one Marinite from his boyhood years. The sketch is by Independent-Journal staff artist Jack Lucey.

MORE PATRIOTIC then? Well, we did fly the Flag every year. But remembered, it now seems more like ritual than like a calculated tribute to Old Glory and Uncle Sam. Come to think of it, we rarely connected the holiday with its original purpose — a salute to the founding of our country. In fact I can't remember that it was ever referred to as Independence Day. It was always the Fourth of July, simply a special occasion for the making of noise, a commodity which we have in more than ample supply 365 days of the year now.

Perhaps, then, the best Independence Day observance would be one spent in relatively quiet contemplation of our country's history and of its present and future role in the affairs of mankind.

But then, how many of us are devoting this day, devoid though it is of many of the distractions of the 1920s and 1930s, to that kind of thing?

A Sound Of The Pipes Heard In Marin

Prince Charles Band Plays Music Of The Highlands

By GIL PEARSON

"Oh, ye'll tak the high road an' I'll tak the low road, An' I'll be in Scotland before ye; But I and my true love will never meet again, On the bonnie, bonnie banks of Loch Lomond."

These classic lines serve well to indicate the trend of interest for some 50 Marin-based youngsters who make up the Prince Charles Bagpipe Band — a successful group dedicated with singular tenacity to presenting authentic Highland dress, dance and music.

Over the past two years these well-trained and inspired young people have been invited to appear at many public functions.

We went to Corte Madera to get the story behind the Prince Charles Bagpipe Band.

THE TEEN-AGE Club was alive with sound as we parked our car and unloaded camera, lights and notebooks. Pipers and drummers were tuning up their instruments with zest and enthusiasm. We shot pictures.

Around a back room conference table we interviewed two of the prime movers of the Bay Area's fastest rising piping and drumming group.

Jack Sutherland of Corte Madera instructs the bass and tenor drum section and drills the bank in marching disciplines. He is otherwise engaged as scoutmaster for Troop 24 (many of his Scouts play with the band), as a park and recreation commissioner, a life member of the St. Andrews Society, and as an executive manager for A.B. Dick Co. of San Francisco.

Bill Merriman of Strawberry is the bagpipe instructor. He is a member of the Caledonian Society, and his occupation is that of a federal court reporter.

WE ASKED FOR background material and Jack and Bill responded that the Prince Charles Bagpipe Band is a non-sponsored, non-profit, tax-exempt unit for the benefit of young boys and girls.

"Jack and I with Gerry Golanty organized the band in the fall of 1967," added Bill Merriman. "We started with 14 members without uniforms and equipment. Today membership is 50-plus, and we are completely equipped with pipes, drums and kilts.

"The ages of pipers and drummers run from 7 to young adults in their early 20s. The band is really divided into three groups. Our seniors are designated as a Class A bagpipe band by the Pacific Coast Pipe Band Association for grading purposes at Scottish competitions and gatherings.

"Every senior works as an instructor with the younger members.

"OUR BAND IS self-supporting," Bill continued, "from prize winnings in parades and contests, and also from earnings for appearances at concerts, banquets and shopping center promotions, and from one or two pipers performing at weddings.

"A recent addition to the band, as player and instructor, is Willy McEarlen who once resided in Glasgow, Scotland. He is recognized as one of the top side drummers in the world."

We pressed Merriman to explain bagpipe music. He replied that it is played from a written score at various tempos such as four-four, two-four, six-eight, etc.

AND HE ADDED, "The beginner learns finger dexterity on the practice chanter which features a double reed. After six to nine months learning exercises and simple tunes, the average student progresses to the bagpipes.

"Bagpipes consist of a leather bag kept filled with air and held under the left arm. Attached to the bag are a blow stick, a chanter on which the melody is played over a nine-note scale, and three drones (two tenors and one bass) which produce a constant chord effect."

ULTIMATE GOAL OF the Prince Charles Bagpipe Band is to make a trip to Scotland and participate in the international contests at the Highland Games.

"But this effort is at least two years into the future," Jack Sutherland noted. "Meanwhile, our band will build up savings for that venture by continuing to accept donations for services

PRACTICE PADS are used by candidates for drummers with the Prince Charles Bagpipe Band. It will take from six months to a year of instruction and practice to attain drumming proficiency.

THEIR REWARD for long hours of work upon the practice pads comes when the students progress to performing on actual drums, and are outfitted with their kilts and other Highland paraphernalia.

TO DEVELOP the necessary finger dexterity and to learn the tunes, the young bagpipers rehearse with practice chanters from which the sound is muted. (Photos by Kit Warne)

JACK SUTHERLAND is the contact for any organization or event wanting colorful Scottish rigs and bagpipes. This summer these pipers will perform in Los Angeles, Portland, Chicago and Coeur d'Alene in Idaho.

"A student-orientated project we are developing," Jack added, "is to offer school districts a Saturday morning program for fourth, fifth and sixth graders. This two-hour presentation will include demonstrations of piping, drumming and dancing in native costumes.

"Included will be a teaching aid package which is to contain pictures, a glossary of terms, the background of the kilt and a history of the bagpipe through the ages to Babylon.

"And, the band will present the students with the Retreat Ceremony which originated during the Napoleonic Wars."

THE BAGPIPE IS an instrument of ancient origin. Statuettes depicting bagpipe playing have been found in Egyptian tombs. It was long known in India and possibly was introduced to the West in the First Century by Nero.

Some form of bagpipe was later used in nearly every European country; it was particularly fashionable in 18th century France, where it was called the musette. Its widest use and greatest development was in the British Isles, particularly Northumberland, Ireland and in the Highlands, Scotland.

The highlands include the counties of Sutherland, Ross and Dumbarton among others. Jack Sutherland is a seventh generation Scot-Canadian who has been a Marinite for the past 12 years.

"JACK," WE QUERIED, "is anything worn under kilts?"

"Members of the most distinguished Scottish regiments have always frowned upon those of their kilt-clad countrymen who do wear something underneath against the day they be struck by a streetcar."

There's No Folk Dancing Generation Gap

Young Marinites Join Their Elders In The Learning And The Fun

There's a tendency to think of folk dancing as the hobby of the middle-aged.

But attendance at any of the several activities at next week-end's Marin Folk Dance Federation's 25th annual Folk Dance Festival will demonstrate the falsity of that belief.

While the Friday, Saturday and Sunday event will pay special tribute to 25-year participants in the festival, beginning with the initial festival of July 14, 1946, under Sausalito Folk Dancers sponsorship and Wilma Young's direction, there will be more teen-age faces among the dancers than ever before.

FOR INSTANCE, among the exhibition dancers will be these two Marin groups:

Skip Clippinger's Troikans, composed of youngsters 10 and older, who will perform the intricate polynesian Vahine Paumoto stick dance.

And the Kopachka Dancers, led by Dean and Nancy Linscott, who will do a Norwegian weaving dance with singing. The Kopachkas include a goodly number of teen-agers along with older dancers.

SPEAKING OF folk dancing, the veteran instructor of the Marin Whirlaways Joe Angeli says: "There just isn't any generation gap."

He continues: "These many youngsters who come to our classes attend because they want to be there. No one made them come. They want to learn. And often they ask to dance with adult partners because they can learn faster and better from experienced dancers."

The adults, he adds, accept the young people into their clubs because of their sincerity, and "because, frankly, they add a bit of zest and energy to the proceedings with their eagerness to learn."

ACCEPTED ON an equal footing, the younger members bear their fair share of special duties such as the party night preparations as well.

Nor is there any disciplinary problem.

Says Dean Linscott of the younger Kopachkas: "There's too much work and too much fun for any of that."

If there are potential trouble-makers, he adds, they just don't come back. "It is not the kind of thing for which they are looking."

MRS. LINSCOTT has a special class for very young children. And sometimes the little ones can let their enthusiasm or impatience get the better of them. But the rule for the class is: "Kids with parents only." And with the parent present, there's no discipline problem.

There's a youth class that meets with Linscott and Fred Sweger on Wednesday evenings at the Mill Valley Recreation Center. It started as a beginners' class, but can no longer be described as such. The young dancers now know some 35 dances.

They will continue to meet through the summer, dividing their time about 60 per cent line dances, 40 per cent partner dances.

GENERALLY SPEAKING, for the teen-age and pre-teen-age dancers, the livelier the dance, the more the enjoyment.

Older dancers confess that they sometimes have to pause and rest awhile, admiring, or envying, the seemingly endless supply of energy of their younger colleagues.

But, the teen-agers rejoin, there are dancers 50 and older "who can keep up with us all

THIS CLOSE-UP shows the detail of the embroidery work which young girls put into their folk dancing costumes. While the designs are their own, the girls are careful to respect the ethnic traditions of the nationality they will represent.

TONI BRATT, left, gets help from Connie Ayers with her costume. They are wearing the authentic Gudbransdal Norwegian attire with embroidery upon which each spent hours. Both girls will be dancing Sunday, July 12, at the Marin Folk Dance Federation Festival on the College of Marin campus in Kentfield with the Kopachka group in an exhibition number.

The time is the not-too-distant future, and the place Switzerland. There is scheduled to take place a meeting of an American President (perhaps Nixon's successor) and a Soviet Union premier.

Predictably, it is a time of crisis. This time the point of tension is Yugoslavia. Is Russia planning an invasion in order to keep its wayward former ally in the Communist orbit? Even at the risk of nuclear holocaust?

In Switzerland men, including Matthew Olds, special assistant to the President, strive desperately to save the peace. In Moscow, a Stalin-like party boss is determined upon conquest. The chess game begins, and Nicolai Ivanovich Andreyev, slated for a pawn's role, becomes something much less passive.

Marlowe, a veteran writer of suspense novels, has concocted an interesting yarn with plenty of action and a good Swiss background. Some of his characters ring true, others are thin. But the book's real weakness is in the superficiality of the plot which under close inspection proves to be cliche-infested, a throwback to the unlamented days of the Cold War's deepest freeze.

The book winds up an acceptable bit of escapism, but out of step and not to be confused in any way with international political realities.

When The Body Is The Message

By DON KEOWN

That man's mouth doesn't always speak the truth is an accepted fact with society. But a relatively new science, called kinesics, holds that there is a non-verbal form of communication that, properly interpreted, will correct or amplify vocal expression.

Author Julius Fast deals with it in his book "Body Language," of which Publisher's Weekly has observed:

"Here 'the body is the message' and Fast's book is literally a book of 'body reading'."

Fast admits that kinesics is still a developing science with many uncertainties. But it is not, he insists, a parlor game, but instead a field that can add new dimension to man's awareness of himself and his understanding of his fellow beings.

Fast explores the body signals — both reflexive and non-reflexive — by which we communicate feelings sometimes completely at odds with our spoken words or the masks we don for society. Especially interesting is the attention he accords to man's need for space and to his reactions when others intrude upon that "territory." As crowding on our planet increases, such studies will grow in pertinence.

Crossed legs, eye winks, raised eyebrows, an erect or slumping posture, arm motions, pursed lips, a touch upon the shoulders — all these can have meaning. But the interpretation must be made within the context of the individual's total behavior pattern.

"Body language and spoken language are dependent on each other. Spoken language alone will not give us the full meaning of what a person is saying, nor for that matter will body language alone give us the full meaning. If we listen only to the words when someone is talking, we may get as much of a distortion as we would if we listened only to the body language."

Not only is kinesics destined to play an increasingly important part in psychiatrist-patient relationships, but, Fast believes, it also could become a vital tool for other sciences.

However, despite Fast's disclaimer that his book is not intended to popularize kinesics at a parlor game level, its publishers state flatly they expect "Body Language" to appeal most strongly to the same people who read "Games People Play." And that best-seller has been used, very often, in just such a loose fashion.

"PLEASE TOUCH" by Jane Howard is closely related in subject matter to Fast's book, being her account of her personal investigation of and involvement with the human potential movement whose sensitivity training and encounter group workshops are mushrooming around the country.

BODY LANGUAGE by Julius Fast; Evans, 192 pages, $4.95.

PLEASE TOUCH by Jane Howard; McGraw-Hill, 269 pages, $6.95.

Sometimes these sessions are intensely verbal with the participants talking almost endlessly about their most private problems and their reactions to those of others. But at other times they are purposely conducted without verbalization. Communication is through the same body language or kinesics discussed by Fast. And the thinking — or feeling, as the movement prefers — is that body expressions will come through honestly and revealingly even when the voice cannot break through old patterns and inhibitions.

Miss Howard, a Life magazine staff writer, attended and participated actively in human potential gatherings in all sections of the country, starting at the fountainhead of the movement, the Esalen Institute headquartered at Big Sur. Some were far-out, others relatively staid. She describes what occurred at all of them quite candidly, giving the non-participant his first clear picture of what an encounter session is really like and demolishing a number of old misconceptions. Some of these meetings sound impressive, others outright silly.

At their best, she says, these group seminars can produce results such as this:

"As I packed my clothes . . . I tried to summarize what I had learned: No lessons that other people, in and out of the movement, hadn't been trying to teach me for years: that I could love strangers and they me, that anger can be converted into strength and force, that tears can melt anguish, and that staying put can be more rewarding than keeping in motion.

"Banal truths, really, but this time they hit home, because these eight days I had trusted the people in charge and yielded to them. They were gentle and wise as well as messianic . . . . They admitted their own limits, gave of themselves incessantly, and perceived in me and in us all something more than we knew was there . . . . "

But in the end, Miss Howard is willing to give the overall movement only limited, qualified approval.

Her book, lively, articulate, written with genuine enthusiasm and the product of much personal probing, both within herself and without, rates an unqualified approval as a curiosity-satisfaction.

Bobby Seale Proves Articulate Spokesman For Black Panthers

SEIZE THE TIME by Bobby Seale; Random House, 429 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by Frank Farrara.

Bobby Seale, ungagged, has a lot to say and he says it well in his story of the Black Panther Party. And, in his terms, he isn't jiving.

Seale, chairman of the party, puts it down in straight language, which achieves what he intended: straightening out misconceptions about the party and providing insight into its workings.

He makes it clear that Black Panthers and Black Nationalists aren't working hand in hand and puts down the "cultural nationalists" who sit around and "bull" while the Panthers are practicing revolutionaries.

The name of the organization itself gives an insight into the thinking of Huey Newton, founder and saint to his followers.

According to Seale, people would ask: "Why do you want to be a vicious animal like a panther?"

Newton, on such occasions, would reply: "The nature of the panther is that he never attacks. But if anyone attacks him or backs him into a corner, the panther comes up to wipe that aggressor or that attacker out, absolutely, resolutely, wholly, thoroughly, and completely."

This might not appease those who view the Black Panthers as a gang of thugs who roam the streets itching to do battle with police, but it is not the Panthers' view of their role, and Seale tells of incident after incident of pure defense on their part.

Of interest to Marin residents, is a passage about Sidney K. Walton, recently fired principal at Martin Luther King School and center of controversy in the Sausalito School District.

Telling of the opening of the first Black Panther office in Oakland, Seale said: "Sid Walton came down and gave us 20, 25 chairs, but he never panned out to be much of anything close to the Party. He was too engrossed in a lot of abstract bull, although he did a lot of work at Merritt College in terms of furthering the things that Huey had already instituted there."

If anyone had the idea that the Black Panthers is a racist organization, Seale wiped out that impression in several passages and points out ". . .you're not going to end racism by perpetuating more racism."

To the charge that the Black Panthers intend to "shoot up" white communities he replies that it is the aim of the Panthers "to defend ourselves against those who already occupy our community, those pigs, and others who come down and shoot us up. We're going to defend our community because we want the power to determine our own destiny in our own black community."

Seale's book covers the key events in the party's history, including the Huey Newton trial, his experiences at the Chicago Eight trial, police raids on Panther headquarters, Eldridge Cleaver's role, as well as projects such as the school breakfast program.

BOBBY SEALE
A lot to say, and he says it well

He reveals that the Black Panther coloring book, which drew criticism for showing a Panther shooting a cop, was rejected by party leaders and distributed against the orders of the Central Committee.

Large and small, the events are all there, but most important are the ideas.

Some Relics Of Americana In The Nation's Heartlands

But in this book, Richard Sanders Allen, the acknowledged world's foremost authority on the subject, reminds us that thousands of these bridges were built in the Midwest — 2,000 in Ohio alone — and that something like 400 still exist.

This entertaining and informative book, rich in illustrations, takes you on a leisurely state-by-state trek through the region to inspect both bridges that are still standing and bridges that are now gone.

Generally speaking, the Midwestern bridges prove somewhat less picturesque than their New England counterparts. But they are nonetheless a part of American transportation and social histories. And there are roofed spans that compare favorably with the most pleasing and most interesting to be found in any region.

Students of Americana cannot always explain the special fascination the subject of covered bridges holds for them. But it is very much there. And in "Covered Bridges of the Middle West" it is given an enthusiastic yet authentic treatment.

A Lady's Lucid Account Of A Highly Complicated War

A WORLD IN FLAMES by Martha Byrd Hoyle; Atheneum, 323 pages, $10. Reviewed by Bryce W. Anderson.

"A World in Flames" is a history of World War II, devoted to the war itself rather than to the many politcal ramifications which accompanied it.

After a hackneyed and unpromising beginning, it develops as a well-done, well-organized account of a war that is exceedingly complex to record. Author Martha Byrd Hoyle follows each campaign to a logical stopping point before picking up another, making the progress of the war easy to follow and eliminating confusion.

Some campaigns get short shrift while others are covered in considerable detail. There is, for instance, only a very sketchy account of the fighting in China and Burma, and no mention at all of the guerrilla resistance in Thailand and Indochina. Also, the role of the Americans is emphasized while those of the British Empire and Free French troops get little attention. However, to cover World War II in one volume necessitates slighting some aspects, and on the whole "A World in Flames" is about as comprehensive and readable a history as its space limitations permit.

It is certainly a more lucid account than many World War II histories which have been produced by more noted scholars.

"Why Can't I Get Carbon Tetrachloride For Home Cleaning?" Mrs. S.B.S.

The Fabric Doctor has warned against the use of "carbon tet" for cleaning at home. Now the U.S. Food & Drug Administration bans it for household use. That's the law and the reason you won't find it available, legally, to you.

We have pointed out repeatedly that carbon tetrachloride is dangerous for home use. Some have accused us of saying that merely to encourage professional drycleaning. Now the Food & Drug Administration terms the chemical as so extremely hazardous that it is impossible to write cautionary labeling sufficient to protect the public. The fluid, which can cause damage to the liver, lungs, heart and kidneys is now banned from any product designed for home use. The FDA's only purpose is to protect you, Mrs. S.B.S. and other consumers.

Trodding The Freedom Trail In Old Boston

The Travel Pages

While no red-blooded Bostonian has forgotten the redcoats, there's a new cry: "The tourists are coming!"

What they come to see in Boston, mainly, is Freedom Trail, which runs from Boston Common to Old North Church.

Between the two points they step off at the Old South Meeting House, the intersection of the Boston Massacre, Faneuil Hall, Paul Revere's cottage, the Bunker Hill Monument, Old Ironsides and other historic points.

Granary Burial Ground holds the remains of Paul Revere, John Hancock, Samuel Adams, Peter Faneuil, the parents of Benjamin Franklin and those victims of the Boston Massacre. Mother Goose is believed buried beneath the stone marked "Mary Goose."

THE NEARBY Boston Common was a hippie hangout until recently. Bostonians once used it to string up witches.

Later its pastures were used for grazing. Benjamin Franklin took his cow to the Commons. The pastures were greener than Franklin's, and the grass was free.

You may, if you wish, still graze your cow there, although no one does. First, the poor animal would get itself killed in traffic. Second, the Common is filled with humans who are napping, not grazing.

BEYOND THE Common, the Boston Globe has restored the Old Corner Bookstore, where Longfellow, Emerson, Holmes, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Whittier and Julia Ward Howe gathered.

When the Globe moved in, a pizza parlor moved out —along with a "Pants Pressed While U Wait" business that had flourished upstairs.

While Boston has dished up history for the tourists, the town is serving up for itself a Little Manhattan. Planted in the 160-million-dollar Prudential Center, for instance, are a 52-story skyscraper, the 29-story Boston-Sheraton and a 12-million-dollar war memorial auditorium.

RISING ON the horizon is the new 75-million-dollar John Hancock Center whose main attraction will be a 60-story tower — tallest skyscraper in all New England.

There is also a new 100-million-dollar Government Center, and a 12-million-dollar Christian Science development under way.

Improvements are being made all the time, too, at close-in Logan International Airport.

The guides tell how the school was named for John Harvard, a Puritan man of the cloth who left his estate and books to Harvard. His books, along with eight million others, are stored in the world's biggest university library.

IT BEARS the name of Harry Widener, an alumnus who took off from school for an ocean voyage. He chose the wrong ship and went down with the Titanic.

Radcliffe, the women's campus, is up the block.

Ivy hangs heavy from the walls of Harvard. Its paths and quads are shadowed by leafy elms and maples in springtime and summer.

WHEN CLASSES are out, the Harvard crowd gathers at Harvard Square. There are more than a dozen bookstores and an Irish pub called Barney's.

At Barney's you may order cheese and onion pie, Irish coffee and corned beef and cabbage. Ladies in Empress gowns and gentlemen in tuxedos stand at the bar after the theater. They drink beer and spoon cabbage in the midst of the hippies.

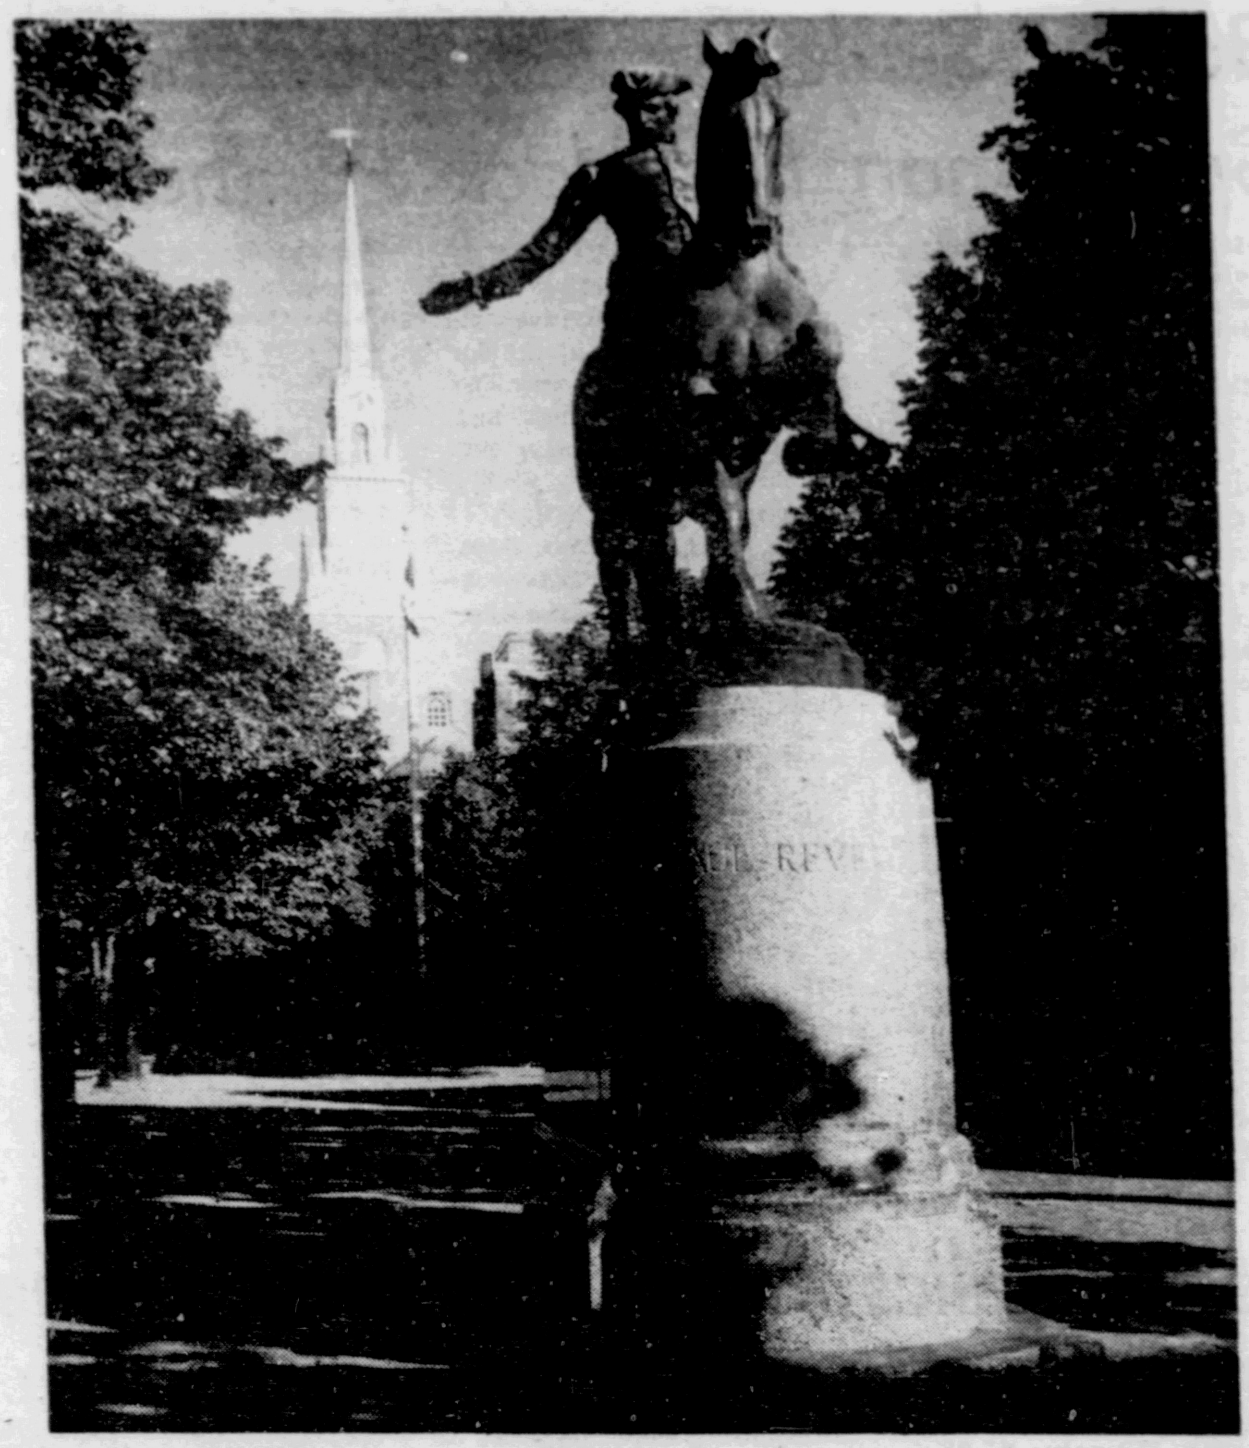
BACK IN Boston, tourists crowd the Olde Union Oyster House, Jimmy's Harborside, Anthony's Pier 4 and Durgin-Park. The Union Oyster House has been in business for more than 140 years.

Louis Philippe, who became kind of France, hid out upstairs during his exile, and Isaiah Thomas published his Massachusetts Spy there until the Revolutionary War. Now, though, it's famed for its oysters.

Durgin-Park, which isn't a park at all but a restaurant, does business around the corner in a building so old it's held together by termites.

THE OWNER claims that during 135 years it has seen only three changes of chefs. It is Boston's most unelegant restaurant — famed for its huge helpings of roast beef and Boston baked beans, New England boiled dinners, chowder, apple pan dowdy and hot cornbread.

In winter-time, bear steaks appear on the menu along with venison pie and raccoon.



BEHIND THE STATUE with which Bostonians have paid tribute to one of their most famous sons, Paul Revere, can be seen the spire of Old North Church that played such a prominent role in the United States' beginnings, and which is today a favored visiting point for tourists walking the Freedom Trail in Boston. (American Airlines photo)

MANY OF THE thoroughfares of Boston, such as Pinckney Street on Beacon Hill, still retain much of the quaint flavor they held back in the days when Americans were moving from colonial status to independence.

SIR NATHAN OF JACOBSON,

Ugly American Or Goodwill Ambassador

By MURRAY J. BROWN

NEW YORK (UPI) — No one expects every American on vacation to be an expert on foreign affairs, languages, customs and traditions. But you may add much to the enjoyment of travel abroad by learning something about the people and places you intend to visit.

Probably even more important, such an obvious interest in the other fellow's problems and way of life could help erase the image of the self-centered "ugly American" which still survives in some areas.

And you may—as I have—make many new and interesting friends.

ACTUALLY, IT IS not all that difficult to double as an unofficial ambassador of goodwill for the United States while enjoying yourself.

The main thing to remember is that you are a guest in a foreign country and that the United States may be judged on the impression you make. It works both ways — you probably will base your opinion of the country on the people you meet and how they act.

Usually you should have no language problems in most popular tourist destinations abroad—a surprising number of local residents speak at least some English. But it really doesn't take too long to learn some common phrases like "good morning," "thanks," "excuse me," "goodbye" and even "Where is the bathroom, please?"

It not only is flattering to your hosts but you might be pleasantly surprised at how eager they will be to be extra helpful.

And you will be a lot more comfortable—and enjoy yourself more—if you know something about local customs and traditions. They differ from country to country, and continent to continent.

For instance, Europeans shake hands (just a quick pump) with men and women every time they meet, and they will be impressed if you give them your calling card. Some, particularly in Italy, still kiss a lady's hand and in eastern Europe men and women often are welcomed with a bear hug and a buss on the cheek.

IN ASIA, THE generally accepted greeting is folding the hands as in prayer and slightly inclining the head. In Japan, however, you bow unless the other person offers his hand first. The deeper the bow, the more respectful. The western handshake is becoming increasingly popular, however.

In many countries, particularly in the major cities and big towns, people generally dress much more conservatively than Americans usually do at home. So leave the aloha shirts and shorts in the closet and save the casual wear for traveling or the beaches and mountains. And never, ever wear hair-curlers in public.

If your sightseeing plans include places of worship, observe the local traditions.

DESPITE THE recent relaxations on dress in Rome, women in Europe still are expected to cover their heads and arms (and no miniskirts or slacks) when visiting Roman Catholic churches. Before entering Moslem mosques, you are expected to take your shoes off. Don't smoke or take pictures unless permission is granted.

You will have to leave your shoes outside in Japan, too, when visiting homes, inns, restaurants, tea and geisha houses and other places which maintain the old customs.

Table manners differ, too. It is not considered proper to pick up a piece of fried chicken with your hand in certain European countries. But if you should be invited to dinner in some areas of the Middle East, it is customary to use your hand (the right one only—the left is taboo) to take what you want from a communal pot and transfer the food to your mouth.

HERE ARE some other general guidelines that could help you avoid embarrassing yourself or offending your hosts:

—Don't take photographs of people or places without prior approval. Some people in Asia and Africa object on religious grounds. In other countries, particularly in eastern Europe, pictures may be prohibited because of propaganda or military security reasons.

—Don't refer to Europeans, Asians and other non-Americans as "natives." You probably won't mind being identified as a native of the United States but would resent being called an American native. And never call a porter, waiter or anyone else in Asia or Africa "boy" — it is regarded as a derogatory term associated with the days of colonialism.

—Don't brag about how great everything is in the United States while putting down everything that is not American.

—Don't believe everyone is out to cheat you. There are some that will but the majority are honest—just as in the United States.

—And last, but far from least, don't be a loud-mouth.

Most veteran travelers agree that the American who is least liable to win friends and influence people is the one who never speaks below a shout. It's not only irritating, but downright rude.

Replacing The Washer On The Faucet

By ANDY LANG

The single lever and other types of faucets that do not utilize washers are making some inroads in modern plumbing, but the very large majority of faucets still require periodic replacement of washers.

If you don't neglect the first step in this repair, you'll have no trouble handling what follows. That initial move is simple: merely turn off the shut-off valve to the faucet line. Sometimes it's under the sink and sometimes it's in the utility room or basement. If you can't find it, close the main water shut-off valve to the house. Whichever valve you use, it's turned off when you move the handle clockwise as far as it will go.

NEGLECT THE warning about shutting off the water—and don't think it doesn't happen—and you'll be amazed to find that the water comes shooting upward with enough pressure to soak the ceiling.

Loosen the cap or packing nut under the faucet handle with a wrench with smooth jaws, first placing a piece of adhesive tape around the cap to prevent marring it. Next, turn the handle clockwise until the stem or spindle comes loose. Some lift out, some must be unscrewed.

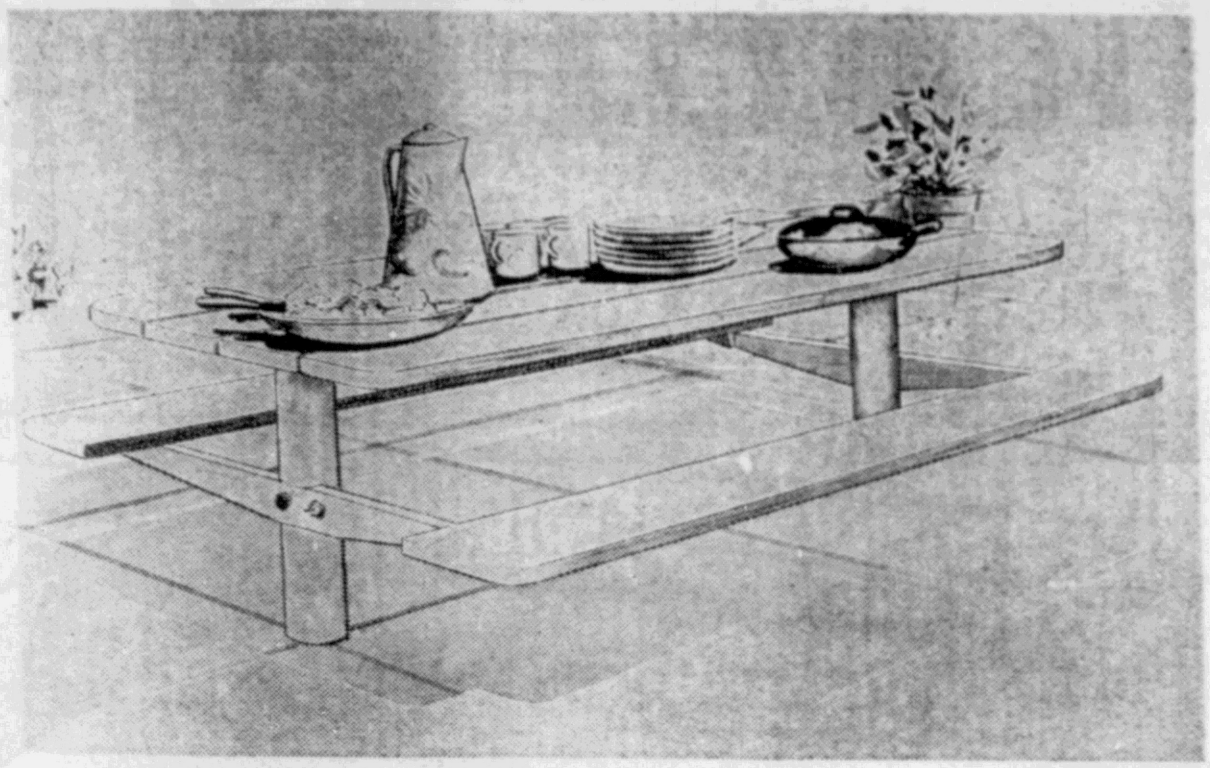
Remove the chewed-up washer at the end of the stem by taking out the holding screw. If you keep a box of assorted washers and screws around the house, as you should, attach a new washer and screw, replace the stem and the job is done. If not, take the old washer to the store and get one the same size, using the opportunity to buy the box of washers you should have had in the first place.

OCCASIONALLY, after washer replacement has been made, the faucet will continue to drip. This is an almost certain sign that the faucet seat, on which the stem and washer rest, has developed burrs or some other uneven quality. To smooth it, you need a seating tool, which is inexpensive and easy to use; the directions come with it.

Less frequent than the leak that comes from the faucet spout is the one that occurs at the packing nut. First see if the leak stops when the nut is tightened, again remembering the caution about the use of adhesive tape. If it doesn't, replace the old packing under the cap. You can buy it at a hardware store.

Getting back to the spout drip, suppose you replace the washer and smooth the seat only to find that there is still a leak? The chances are that the stem or spindle has outlived its usefulness. Take the old one to a dealer and get a duplicate. Some hardware stores and hardware departments of lumber yards carry them, but even then you may not find an exact match. In that case, a plumbing supply store probably has or can get what you need.

Fortunately, about 99 times out of 100, a dripping faucet yields to the mere replacement of a washer.



THIS NOVEL picnic table requires a minimum of lumber. And because no lumber need touch the ground, it has an especially long life span. The posts are concrete, iron or steel, set in cement. The table can be built six-feet, eight-feet or 10-feet in length. And it is easily dismantled for winter storage, if one prefers to do so. Covered with polyethylene, however, it will withstand the worst elements without damage. You can send 75 cents to Independent-Journal, Post Office Box 215, Briarcliff Manor, N.Y., 10510, and ask for Lifetime Picnic Table Pattern No. 577. Be sure to include your zip code number.

112 Die In Spain Jet Crash

BARCELONA, Spain (UPI)—Search crews reached the wreckage of a chartered jetliner today and reported all 112 persons aboard killed when the plane crashed into the side of a mountain on a flight for British vacationers to Spain's Costa Brava resort.

"We can now officially confirm that there are no survivors," a spokesman for the Spanish Air Force reported.

The four-engine Comet, owned by the Dan-Air Co., crashed Friday night on its approach to Barcelona Airport from Manchester, England. It carried 105 passengers and seven crew members.

SOCCER MEMBERS

The passengers were reported to include seven members of a British soccer team, all bachelors.

"It was decided that all the bachelors should go and that all the married men should stay at home," said Robert Grant, a supporter of the industrial league team in London.

Rescue workers at the scene said the plane broke into three pieces and came to rest in a small valley surrounded by trees 32 miles north of Barcelona. The area, in the Montseny Mountains, is known as the Peaks of the Needles.

Officials said there was no indication of a cause for the crash.

The British Consul General, D.H. Clibborn, flew to the area in a helicopter to help identify the bodies.

INTENSIVE SEARCH

Discovery of the plane followed a night of intensive land and sea search centered near the seaside village of Mataro, 14 miles northeast of Barcelona. Some residents of the village had reported seeing a plane go down.

The Montseny Mountains are a rugged range forming a half moon to the north of Barcelona.

In London, a spokesman for Dan-Air said he believed all the passengers aboard the Comet were British and that they included a baby.

The spokesman said the passengers included 48 men, 53 women, three children and the infant. There were seven crewmen.

The Barcelona airport said the jet was 12 miles out and at an altitude of 6,000 feet when it lost contact on radar on on radio.

The crash was the fourth in the last 10 years of a British charter flight en route to the Spanish Costa Brava area.

On June 3, 1967, a plane from Manston, Kent, England to Perpignan, France, crashed in the mountains, killing all 88 persons aboard.

Marin Grows 39 Per Cent Since 1960

Preliminary figures of the 1970 census show that Marin County has a population of 204,046.

The figure indicates a growth of 39 per cent over the official 1960 total of 146,820.

According to the preliminary population count released by the Census Bureau in San Francisco, San Rafael has grown 88 per cent during the past decade; Novato, 60 per cent; and San Anselmo and Mill Valley, smaller percentages.

San Rafael grew from 20,460 in 1960 to 38,493 this year; Novato from 17,881 to 28,593; Mill Valley from 10,441 to 12,147, and San Anselmo from 11,584 to 12,401.

Figures were unavailable for other Marin cities.

Official figures are not expected until November or December, but the preliminary figures have been close in the past. The 1960 June figure for Marin missed the official count by only 1,300.

The state Department of Finance estimated Marin's population at 187,000 in 1965, then 201,200 in 1967, and 203,600 in 1969.

'HONOR AMERICA'

Graham Calls For End To Divisions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Evangelist Billy Graham opened day-long "Honor America" festivities today with a warning that "the American dream could be turned into a nightmare" unless the nation ends its divisions.

U.S. Park Police estimated 15,000 to 20,000 persons, including a few hundred dissenting hippies, filled the area in front of the Lincoln Memorial for the Fourth of July patriotic-religious ceremony that was televised nationally.

Hollywood entertainers led by Bob Hope were scheduled to bring the observance to a close tonight with an entertainment show on the Washington Monument grounds.

Graham, the principal speaker at the morning ceremony, devoted most of his address to disunity in the nation and said: "Today we call upon all Americans to stop this polarization before it is too late."

His remarks drew loud cheers from the crowd and a few jeers from the hippies, who waded into the reflecting pool in front of the Lincoln Memorial. They held aloft a banner reading "Hour of decision—God or Country" and the hippie flag emblazoned with a marijuana leaf.

Late Friday night, police clashed with about 200 youths, identified as yippies, who gathered on the Washington Monument grounds chanting "smoke marijuana." Six policemen were injured and five persons arrested before the crowd dispersed.

There was no hint of trouble today, however. The thousands who came to cheer the "Honor America" participants paid scant attention to the hippies in the reflecting pool.

Although sponsors billed "Honor America Day" as a nonpartisan show of unity in a divided country, the observance was assailed by some critics as an "Establishment" program and by some as a maneuver to cloak Nixon administration policies in religious and patriotic fervor.

Some local blacks called for a boycott, and the crowd at the Lincoln Memorial was nearly all white.

The program opened with a two-minute "national salute" in which citizens from Maine to California expressed their patriotic feelings by sounding auto horns, ringing church bells, blowing factory whistles and shooting off firecrackers.

Pat Boone sang the national anthem. Astronaut Frank Borman said a prayer. Rabbi Marc Tanenbaum read the scripture. Bishop Fulton J. Sheen gave the benediction. And Kate Smith belted out "God Bless America" as she has so often sung it before.

The religious service was followed by a colorful "procession of flags." With military bands and Boy Scouts leading the way, thousands of people walked from the Lincoln Memorial to the White House ellipse to plant miniature American flags in a pattern that spelled out the letters USA.

Rounding out the celebration will be an evening entertainment program at the Washington Monument emceed by Bob

Senate In Session; Reagan Hits Demos

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — California dragged into an unprecendented fourth day without a budget today as a fierce battle of wills between Gov. Ronald Reagan and 13 Senate Democrats escalated.

Both sides dug their heels in even deeper and the Senate decided to bypass usual Fourth of July celebrations at home in favor of another run at thawing the deadlock over Reagan's $6.59 billion budget.

"I think it has made us look ridiculous in the eyes of our own citizenry," Reagan told a special news conference Friday night. "And it has made government look a little less stable in California as far as the rest of the country is concerned."

He summoned newsmen to his office where he announced rejection of a demand by holdout Democrats to supply the votes to pass the budget in exchange for an extra $180 million in school aid. They want the sum included in his $1 billion tax shift bill.

REPORTS CONFLICT

Seven Democrats handed Reagan their proposal during an hour and a half meeting in his capitol office. One senator said Reagan became "angry" at one point but the governor described himself as "righteously indignant."

They handed the governor a letter insisting that the first $180 million contained in the tax revision legislation be spent for extra aid to local schools "rather than for tax reductions for luxury homes for the wealthy few."

"We do not now advocate, nor have we ever advocated during this debate a tax increase," they told him.

Senate Democratic floor leader George Moscone said that the Republican governor "came out in a very rough demeanor. . .I don't think on the basis of getting what we asked for the meeting was very fruitful," he said.

LAST YEAR

Assembly Democrats blocked the budget last year for three days while successfully demanding more local school aid. The Senate Democratic barrier pitched the state into an unprecedented fourth day.

Nixon, Paris Aide Discuss Future Course

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (UPI)—President Nixon, seeking a peaceful solution to the war in Vietnam, summoned his new chief negotiator at the Paris peace talks to his seaside White House for a strategy session today.

The meeting signals the start of "phase two" of Nixon's plan to wind down the war by upgrading the stalemated talks and giving Bruce "great flexibility" in dealing with the Communist negotiators.

One of the issues expected to be discussed at the mid-morning meeting was the possibility of a coalition government in Saigon. President Nixon said in a Wednesday broadcast the United States would not impose a coalition, but he did not rule out the chance that Saigon would voluntarily accept it.

Sitting in on the meeting were Ambassador Philip C. Habib, acting chief of the American delegation, U. Alexis Johnson, undersecretary of state for political affairs, and Dr. Henry A. Kissinger, Nixon's chief foreign policy adviser.

The president motored to the El Adobe restaurant in San Juan Capistrano, about seven miles to the north, with his wife, Pat, daughter, Tricia, and close friend, Charles G. "Bebe" Rebozo.

Nixon reportedly had what was called the "Nixon special" consisting of tacos, refried beans, enchiladas and tortillas.

Following the dinner, the Nixon party returned to the compound.

Rioting In Belfast Leaves Five Dead

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI)—British troops battled street by street through heavy sniper fire today and ended a night of rioting that left five persons dead and at least 80 wounded.

The task force of 1,500 British soldiers clamped a curfew on a 50-block area of the Falls Road section and began a house-to-house search for weapons stockpiled by Catholics in their campaign against Protestants in this strife-torn corner of Ireland. Any citizen leaving his home was arrested on sight.

The curfew was ordered lifted for a two-hour period beginning at 5 p.m. to permit housewives to do their weekend shopping. Bread and milk trucks entered the area under armed escort.

Two of the victims were rooftop snipers, picked off by British soldiers who pushed into the area under the glare of searchlights and finally restored a semblance of peace at 5 a.m. Three other civilians were also killed.

Nineteen soldiers were wounded along with at least 61 civilians, 17 of whom were taken to hospitals.

Six hours later, an Army spokesman said search teams had seized more than 100 rifles and pistols, 15,000 rounds of ammunition, 45 pounds of explosives, eight grenades and 100 homemade incendiary bombs.

It was a straight clash between the British Army—sent in last August to protect the Catholics after days of riots with Protestants—and bands of grenade-tossing youths.

The Protestants for once stood aside.

The deaths raised to 12 the number killed in two weekends of rioting touched off by the arrest of Roman Catholic civil rights leader Bernadette Devlin, a member of British Parliament, who was sent to prison for six months for participating in last August's riots in Londonderry.

The army sealed off the embattled Falls Road area with iron barricades, placed it under an indefinite curfew and began a massive search for arms. A spokesman said it would be the biggest house-to-house search in Northern Ireland's history.

It was the seizure of caches of submachine guns, molotov cocktails, pistols and homemade dynamite grenades in a series of raids by the army and police that provided the immediate spark for the rioting that broke out Friday.

U.S. Admits Shelling Cambodian Positions

SAIGON (UPI)—The U.S. command acknowledged today that U.S. guns have been bombarding border areas of Cambodia since American troops withdrew last Tuesday. Military sources said South Vietnam had pulled out the last of 4,000 troops rushed to the defense of Phnom Penh.

A military spokesman in Phnom Penh said a heavy concentration of Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops had massed in Kompong Thom Province for an attack against the provincial capital of Kompong Thom, 80 miles north of Phnom Penh.

South Vietnamese commanders, military sources said, have withdrawn the last of the forces rushed to Phnom Penh when Cambodian commanders reported an imminent threat to the capital six days ago.

The informed sources said the South Vietnamese Marines and Army troops made only light contacts with the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese around Phnom Penh and the commanders concluded the threat report was phoney.

They pulled back from Phnom Penh to positions around Kompong Speu, 25 miles southeast of the capital 2,500 infantrymen and armored troops. A 1,500-man marine force was withdrawn from Phnom Penh's outskirts to South Vietnam, the sources said.

The sources said South Vienamese corps headquarters established at Phnom Penh airport was removed today to the Mekong Delta City of Can Tho in South Vietnam.

In Vietnam, the U.S. command in a delayed report said six Vietnamese civilians were killed and eight wounded when two high-explosive shells struck a house Wednesday one mile south of the provincial capital of Ham Tan 75 miles east of Saigon.

Spokesmen for American commanders said artillery fire

Pacific Winds, Fog Expected To Cool Off Marin

Marin sweltered for the second straight day yesterday but Pacific winds and fog are expected to cool the thermometer for the July 4 weekend.

Temperatures in the 80s were expected today and tomorrow.

The mercury bubbled over 100 again yesterday in some parts of Marin. Terra Linda reported 107. San Anselmo had 100. It reached 94 in San Rafael.

But smog was down because a weather inversion lessened. The combined pollution index for San Francisco and Oakland was a light 36, compared with Thursday's high reading of 103.

MARGUERITES need but little attention, yet they produce a truly dazzling carnival of color that continues in your garden for many months. Furthermore, they are a versatile plant. In white, yellow or even pink, Marguerites will not only highlight your landscape, but, in portable containers, can also be used in unique planting situations for special eye-catching effects. Shown here is one white Marguerite adorning the top of a retaining wall adjacent to some garden steps. From far away or up close, their impact is considerable. (Photo courtesy of California Association of Nurserymen)

The Reasons Why Everyone Likes Daisies

Is it any wonder that everyone likes daisies?

They grow almost anywhere and under most any condition, but thrive especially well in Marin. Daisies require little attention and they produce a dazzling carnival of color many months of the year.

THIS PAIR IS highly recommended by the California Association of Nurserymen for use in sunny borders or as feature items in containers for use on entry porch or patio.

Marguerites are available in nursery containers and often full of bloom when you transfer them to the garden.

The yellow-flowering Marguerite rivals the spectacular white-blooming one for popularity with California gardeners. Pink Marguerites are newer introductions and shopping may turn up double flower forms of these varieties, whose pink coloring is soft and delicate.

THE GARDENER is able to create pleasing effects with Marguerites. The yellow ones are striking when grown with and contrasted to the blue hues of Delphinium, the pink of Petunias, or the blue of that other daisy mentioned above — Felicia.

Felicia is also known as Blue Marguerite, though the two are not related.

The low, compact growth serves as an eye-catching border. As an accent plant, Felicia is hard to beat. It's also ideal in raised beds and may be used on slopes where its drought-resistant characteristic pays off in minimum maintenance.

Both Marguerite and Felicia are easy to grow and nurserymen will have the duo available in various size transplants. For those who wish instant beauty, get the larger-size specimens which will immediately add splashes of color to the surroundings.

IT IS NOT uncommon, to find in the nursery landscape-size yellow and white Marguerites in full color. What a face lifting to the garden the addition of a few containers of these make!

Whether you start from small plants from nursery flats or rely on the larger editions for immediate effect, you'll enjoy the continuous beauty the daisies provide.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

✓ Hydrangeas in bloom may still be set out this month, but some varieties are coming to the end of their flowering period.

✓ For shaded and semi-sunny areas, use coleus in a basket to decorate your outdoor living areas. It won't cascade as do some container plants, but it will give you a spectacular showing of multi-colored foliage.

✓ Need a quick, sunny border? Rely on such dwarf marigolds and zinnias as the Mini-Pink, the Cherry Buttons and the Thumbelina.

✓ In trimming your private hedge, shear it so that it is slightly wider at the base than it is at the top. This exposes the lower part of the hedge to sunlight and keeps it green and healthy.

✓ Feed dahlias now if you haven't done so in the past month. Large-flowered, show varieties should have their side buds pinched out to direct all the growth to the few terminal buds.

A Well-Spent Vacation: Some Tales From Franconia

By such measure, this writer can recall a real winner.

It was a week spent in a tiny West German dirt-street farm village of less than a dozen houses.

Dairying is big in this village. The truck which comes at dawn to pick up milk at the farm houses signals the arrival of each new morning. Not long after, the sound of farmers' tractors headed for the fields, pulling trailers loaded with manure, announce by sound and smell that a new working day is beginning. In the fields dairy feed is produced. In the farmyards hay is stacked high in neat bales.

It was not until the second or third day that it became apparent there are no dairy barns as we know them, nor are any cows to be seen.

WHERE ARE the cows?

Inside the farmhouses, it was explained.

Why aren't they brought outside to pasture in good weather as is the way of dairymen in the Alps?

These cows, it was explained, are a special Franconian breed which spend their entire lives indoors and see the light of day only when the door to the stable end of the house is open.

The cows prove amazingly clean for spending their entire lives in a stable. The farm house tends to smell like a stable.

But the people, not the cows, are what makes the village unforgettable.

OBSERVE THE MAN who is reclaiming a garden from an uncultivated thicket at the intersection of two dirt roads on the edge of the village. You see him there only from dawn to dusk on Sunday and week days from after supper until dark. If you inquire, you will learn that he was what we would call a nurseryman in East Germany. He fled to the West, taking a room in the beer hall-guest house of this tiny village. He found work as a building laborer. Later his wife came to join him. Even later, the communists permitted his aging father to depart East Germany (they don't have to pay him a pension after he leaves). Now the three of them share tiny upstairs rooms in the 150-year-old guest house, which has no inside plumbing, save a cold water tap in the ground floor hallway.

The plot of ground this old nurseryman lovingly cultivates is known as the "Russian's Grave." After the end of World War II, the body of a Russian army deserter was found in the forest near the village. The villagers buried him in the uncultivated tangle by the road junction at the edge of the village. A few years ago, West German government authorities came through the countryside disinterring unknown dead and removing them to proper cemeteries. But in this village, the place from which the Russian solider's body was removed will evermore be known as "the Russian's grave."

DURING THE YEARS that the Russian body lay there, his grave was tenderly cared for and regularly decorated by one farmer's wife from the little village.

She had lost her son in the German army in Russia. Along with hundreds of thousands of others, he was reported "missing" and never heard from again.

Because she couldn't tend her own son's grave, she tended the Russian's grave and expressed the hope that somewhere in Russia an understanding mother was tending the grave of an unknown German soldier, her son.

WHO IS THE OLD FELLOW who walks always alone, doesn't speak unless first spoken to, says as little as is civil, and even sits alone at the beer hall while all other village men sit together for conversation?

"Bormann" is what some of his neighbors call him, although not within his hearing.

During the week he works in the forest with the crew that still manufactures charcoal in the ancient way.

But he keeps to himself. Even at lunch time he sits alone at a distance from the others.

If you offer him a ride, he declines cooly and laconically.

The villagers know he is a bit too young to be the real Martin Bormann, but they enjoy winking slyly as they tell strangers that this loner in their midst has to be Hitler's disappeared aide-in-hiding.

IN THE LITTLE SHANTY on the far side of the village lives an old crone, bent nearly double by the burden of her toil. She looks like a witch come to life from an old Disney cartoon movie.

To some of the villagers she is known as "Herr Friederich's widow." This name is startling to strangers because Friedrich is a first name and nobody is ever called Mr. in German in connection with his first name.

Furthermore, "Herr Friedrich's widow" was never married.

When World War II was over, she was still a fairly young woman — the only survivor of her family in an East German village. Nearby had been a monastery. It was destroyed in the war. Only one monk survived. He was Brother Friedrich (not his real name, of course).

The two fled together to West Germany where they had neither friends nor relatives. They were permitted to occupy a left-over temporary cottage for bomb refugees which still stood in the tiny village of this vacation visit.

The lady of this house referred to the man of the house as "Herr Friedrich" when she mentioned him to the villagers.

When he died a few years ago, she confided to villagers that "Herr Friedrich's" wish had been to go to God unstained and untarnished. During the two decades they had shared the same house, they had "never touched each other."

Today "Herr Friedrich's widow" is a proud woman. She is proud that she made it possible for "Herr Friedrich" to achieve his life's goal — to go to God unstained and untarnished.

How does "Herr Friedrich's widow" survive alone and in her crippled condition?

She labors in her garden each day from dawn to dusk. She goes to bed at dark for she has not the wherewithal to provide light or heat for her shack. On Sunday, however, she is up well before dawn and on the road by foot to a distant village where she attends her church.

If Sherwood Anderson had visited a certain Franconian village, the name of his best-selling book would not have been "Winesburg, Ohio," and the stories in it would have been even better.

Admonition Around Our Liberty Bell

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Firebugs Blamed For Blaze Series

I am writing this letter having again been awakened by fire engines for the third night in succession. I am sure the people living in the area of Sun Valley are as aggravated and angry as I am at these fires set in the same place, at the same time day and night during the past week. In at least three instances our family have been awakened to the sight of flames and the smell of smoke, and sparks from these fires have landed on or near our property and that of other homes in the area.

There seems little doubt that this is the work of arsonists, and it is high time that San Rafael and San Anselmo City Councils offered a reward of $1,000 or more to arrest these firebugs. Furthermore if teen-agers or children are found to be responsible, their parents should pay the cost to the taxpayer for the use of the fire department as well as the cost of the reward. I would like to emphasize that firecrackers have not been heard close to the time these fires were set, so that they hardly seem to be accidental. Such arsonists are potentially murderers and should be confined until mentally cured of this lethal habit. I personally expect an immediate governmental response to this dangerous situation.

Hopeful Note For Bike Trail

Thank you for your excellent editorial of June 12 entitled "Marin Bike Trails Find It a Slow and Bumpy Struggle."

Please let me add a more optimistic note. Despite the fact that on June 22 no monies were allocated in the 1970-71 budget by the board of supervisors for any bicycle route which would have provided safe transportation for any adult or child going to and from school or work, condemnation papers were filed June 23 by the county counsel's office. This legal move will remove the bottleneck which now exists on the one-half mile stretch of Northwestern Pacific right-of-way from Kappas Yacht Harbor to the heliport. Your editorial failed to mention the vital nature of this link. No legal safe way is available for children or adults to travel north from Sausalito except by motor vehicle. Sausalito children attend high school in Mill Valley. Accidents are occurring both to bicyclist and hitchhikers!

According to County Counsel Douglas J. Mahoney, Marin County is specifically authorized by Streets and Highways Code Section 951 to maintain bicycle paths alongside county highways. . .

Galbraith Theory Put Under Scrutiny

I read with great interest the article by John Kenneth Galbraith (I.J, June 27) in which he seems satisfied that he has discovered a new view of economics wherein the producer is the villain who can and does raise prices and wages. . .

As I understand his explanation he says the producer conditions the consumer so that the latter appears to be the eager gullible buyer who is responsible for the product demand which pushes prices higher in the economy. This article explains fully why people buy, but not why prices keep rising. Prices generally go up when the supply becomes short and fails to meet the demand. This is not our problem. Aside from the housing market our consumer products are in adequate supply. Certainly no shortage exists that would call for higher prices for this reason.

I agree, as Mr. Galbraith points out that higher prices are self inflicted, but not because industry uses the principle that "it pays to advertise" but because the people have become insensitive to basic economics.

As I see it, "unless the laws of supply and demand are free to operate our national economy cannot remain in balance." The "labor market" by assuming concepts other than this economic reality has created such an imbalance. A situation where qualified workers must stand on the side lines while other workers demand higher compensation is not honest, but more important is the fact that under such controls the cost of production is no longer free, it can move in only one direction and that is up.

LINES ON LIVING

By Rabbi HAIM KEMELMAN

The ancient prophet of Jerusalem, Jeremiah, coined the lamentable phrase which has now become the reality of our life: "Peace, peace, peace; and there is no peace."

We say peace and we have war; we say peace and we see desolation; we say peace and there is no peace in our midst.

What has happened to the civilization of man that after all the celebrations and salutations of peace — for thousands of years — we are now invoking the princely and prophetic concept of harmonic humanity only to make a mockery of it? What has become of the beautiful words of peace and love preached on the heights of mounts of the great religions? In the name of what cult, what God, what humanity do humans kill one another, mutilate one another, hate one another?

DREADFULLY, the human animal can be the most beastly. He will twist words to mask his animality and cite scriptures to prove his humanity. He will then go on hating more for love and ravaging more for peace — losing his own soul and those of others. There is a war of arms in Southeast Asia and there is a war of hearts inside America, and there is a war of attrition inside the heart. And there is little consolation in shouting at one another when the elements of human peace are shattered.

"Peace, peace, peace; and there is no peace." Even the symbol of peace is broken, with the crown lying in the dust. The star of peace over Jerusalem is more than eclipsed. Bloody stains cover the paths where divine prophecy of peace first went forth. There are no harbingers of peace in Jerusalem today, only the thunder of explosives and firearms. The city of eternal peace, the land of prophecy of universal concord lies in the dust of lethal powder. School children leave their homes never sure to return, as some of their playmates are found blown to smithereens by terror lurking from the dark. The innocent, the people who have nothing to do with it all — on both sides of the border — suffer and are bloodied in agony and pain, crying "Peace, peace, peace; and there is no peace."

THERE IS NO peace because the conditions are frightfully missing. We can have human desolation and call it peace. But peace is not a platitude, it is a proposition. The ancients had a prophetic designation for it, referring to its condition as a convenant of peace — imperatives embodied in a set of relationships of mutual respect, recognition and the binding commitment of reciprocal human interaction. They also called it shalom, meaning peace, but also testifying to wholeness — to total human fulfillment through involvement.

Peace is not the scribbling of a signature on a piece of paper that carries no firm identity and no certain reality. Peace is not negotiated by lip service, phrase peddling and absenteeism. Peace is a total condition of humanity, of complementary human relations: of contact between peoples, of contract between nations, of a covenant of hearts.

There are no half measures to peace — inner peace and outer peace. It's all or nothing. There is only one way to peace — peace! Active peace! Verbal peace! And the price of peace is peace — total and in one piece, not in desolation.

It's high time for man to come home in peace, to raise his sights to the heights of mountains, to see clearer and to do better in behalf of peace, in behalf of humanity. Perhaps we can go back to the origin of prophecy and begin anew the works of peace — in our land and abroad — and see the vision of the prophet: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of the messenger of good tidings, that announceth peace, the harbinger of good tidings that announceth salvation."

Nixon's Report On Cambodia Leaves Many Things Unmentioned

WASHINGTON — Taken within his own frame of reference, President Nixon's balance sheet on Cambodia is impressive. Despite the deliberate ambiguities as to the future, he makes the case for the success of the military incursion.

What is left outside the carefully restricted frame is quite another matter. Large areas of Cambodia have been overrun and destroyed. Reports to private welfare organizations indicate that hundreds of thousands of displaced persons are without a means of livelihood.

At the height of the invasion a report in the New York Times told of the destruction by South Vietnamese forces of the country's largest rubber plantation. For employment and for hard-currency earnings it was as if in the United States an invading army had destroyed General Motors and Ford. Other similar installations on which the fragile Cambodian economy depended were wiped out or severly damaged.

WHAT THE PRESIDENT'S carefully constructed recital left out was the balance sheet of human misery. The ethnic hostilities between Thais, Cambodians and Vietnamese, deeply rooted in the past, came boiling to the surface with the spread of the war to Cambodia.

Early accounts told of attempts to transfer Cambodian residents of Vietnamese origin to South Vietnam. They will scarcely be better off than in the refugee camps in Cambodia except perhaps for a greater sense of security, out of reach of Cambodian hostility.

If the uncertain Lon Nol regime is to have any future, massive economic aid will be essential to stem the tide of hunger, suffering and disorder.

IT IS ON the future of Lon Nol that the President's report is vaguest. For the first time since the start on April 30 there is the suggestion that preventing a Communist takeover of Cambodia was one motive for the action. The stress hitherto has been wholly on destroying the sanctuaries to protect American forces in South Vietnam and insure the future of the Vietnamization program.

Whether Lon Nol can be saved is an open question. He has of necessity ceded large areas of the country already occupied by the Communist enemy. The Cambodian army —30,000 by a generous count— is unprepared to use the variety of weapons being flown in by the United States. With assorted uniforms and often without shoes, they are the least warlike of all the Indochinese peoples.

The suspicion will not down that behind the deliberate vagueness of the President's references to Cambodia's future is a half-concealed intent to make sure by one means or another that American help sustains an anti-communist regime in Phnom Penh. The report is current that a strong and determined right-wing character waits in the wings to take over — with American backing — if Lon Nol falters. This would not be too hard to bring off as the regime becomes increasingly dependent on American aid.

AT HIS LAST press conference, Secretary of State William P. Rogers put emphasis on the President having informed him that the United States would shortly send an ambassador to Phnom Penh. At present a charge d' affaires heads a staff of 30 to 35, including military attaches. This could be more than a routine act, since it makes little sense to send an ambassador to a capital in imminent danger of being swallowed up by the Communists.

THEN THERE IS that other balance sheet of divisiveness here at home which the President acknowledged in passing. One measure is the 58-to-37 vote in the Senate on the Cooper-Church Amendment to curtail the President's options in Cambodia.

The division will grow. It will not be healed until the war is ended.

If You're Seeking Federal Funds, Beware Of Successful Program

WASHINGTON — Despite everything you hear about the government, there still is plenty of money around for projects. The only trouble is, you can't get the money if you have a plan that works. You must have one that no one is quite sure about.

A vice president of a university system in the Northeast told me about this the other day when he applied for money for a program to run summer schools for students who needed extra help to get into college. He told me the meeting went something like this:

"NOW MR. HAAS,' from our records it appears that you're applying for a grant of $500,000 to run a summer school project for students hoping to keep up in college this fall."

"That's correct. We did it last year, and it was tremendously successful. We only had a drop-out rate of 6 per cent."

"Oh, dear me. Then this is not a pilot project."

"No, it's not. We know it works."

"WHAT A SHAME."

"What do you mean what a shame?"

"Well, if this were a pilot project the government would be happy to finance it. We'd be very interested in knowing what could come of it. But we can't very well give money to something that's been proven, can we?"

"Why the hell not?"

"Mr. Haas, we're very willing to fund any educational program, providing it's iffy. But we can't throw money away on things that work. Congress would have a fit."

"I still don't understand why."

"I'M TRYING to explain it to you. The government has no trouble getting money from Congress for study programs. It doesn't matter how much it costs to study a program; we can get the funds. But once we ask for money for a program that has been proven successful, Congress will be committed to it, and nobody wants that, do they?"

"Suppose that I request the money for a study project. Could I get it then?"

"But you already told me that it had worked last summer. There's no sense having a study of it, if it works."

"I'm not trying to be difficult, but this is a very important project. We are taking in people this year who are going to find it tough sledding to keep up in the fall unless they have some remedial work."

"IT'S NOT OUR fault that your program worked last summer, Mr. Haas. Had it failed, we would have given you a blank check to try it a different way. But we're not here to dole out taxpayers' money for programs that have succeeded."

"Just the other day a superintendent of a public system in the Midwest tried a visual-reading program for his state which turned into a disaster. The machines didn't work, the teachers couldn't handle them, and the students lost interest after the first five minutes."

"Did we cut him off? We did not. We gave him another $10 million to find out why he failed. And we're ready to pour in another $10 million if he doesn't come up with answers. The whole department is excited by the failure."

"IS THERE ANY possible way of getting the $500,000, knowing what you know about my program?"

"I hardly think so, Mr. Haas, You've made a mess of things as it is. Our motto in the government is, 'Nothing fails like success.'"

TRY AND STOP ME

Heard about the tramp who hollered for help when a watchful hound dog clamped his jaws on his posterior? "Call off your dog," pleaded the tramp to the farmer who appeared to investigate the cause of the commotion. "I can't," answered the farmer—not too unhappily. "His name is Sick'm."

Molotov cocktails in a cemetery led to the rumor that police had insisted on searching the coffin of a young girl who died a day or so earlier.

Angry youths attacked the police with stones and crowbars, troops moved in with nauseau gas and the fighting flared.

Roman Catholic priests tried in vain to restore order. Housewives linked arms and tried to keep the mob from the troops but the youths commandeered a bus, drove it straight at the line of women, and then overturned it and set it afire.

Grenades and dynamite charges began to go off, shattering glass in homes and shops. The first snipers went into action.

The army proclaimed a curfew at 10:30 p.m., warning people through a loud speaker on a helicoptor "Go to your homes! go to your homes!... or you will be arrested."

Many of the older men drifted away, but younger ones stayed on the streets behind rough barricades.

The army sent sharpshooters to the roofs of tall buildings overlooking the area, and shortly before midnight the first of 1,500 troops began moving into the Roman Catholic stronghold under heavy sniper fire.

Away from the riot center, bombs exploded in front of a newspaper office, damaged a church, set fire to a gasoline station and slightly damaged a savings bank. Two soldiers who arrived at the Belfast Savings Bank after the blast were shot in the legs by snipers.

Suit Threatens To Cut Power Of Penn Central

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Three utility firms filed suit Thursday night threatening to cut off power to the bankrupt Penn Central Railroad unless its bills were paid.

The suit which also asks for an estimated $2.3 million in back payment was filed hours after the Interstate Commerce Commission announced plans in Washington to begin a full investigation into why the railroad went broke.

The action was filed jointly in a petition by the Philadelphia Electric Co., Consolidated Edison of New York Inc. and the Pennsylvania Power and Light Co. The three firms supply electricity, gas and steam power to the railroad.

Terra Linda Driver Is Fair

A Terra Linda man was reported in fair condition today at Marin General Hospital with injuries received when his car overturned on the Terra Linda onramp to Highway 101 at 8:05 a.m. yesterday.

Donald Mark Hartland, 28, of 320 Devon Drive, suffered fractured ribs, multiple face cuts and a possible fractured back, the hospital said.

The California Highway Patrol reported that Hartland was thrown from the car as it overturned and was then pinned under it. Passing motorists freed him.

NIXON

"Honor America Day" mass patriotic rally on the Lincoln Memorial in Washington had White House backing, Nixon limited his participation to a taped message, which will be broadcast.

Nixon plans to return to Washington Monday after an unusually busy 12-day sojourn at this Pacific headquarters. His mood appears more buoyant now America troops have been withdrawan from Cambodia.

The chief executive now is hopeful Bruce will be able to move the Communist negotiators off dead center. He considers the white haired 72-year-old Bruce a "giant" among diplomats.

In announcing his appointment during a televised foreign policy "conversation" Wednesday night, Nixon stressed the flexibility Bruce will have. He said the U.S. proposals are not on a "take it or leave it basis," and there is room for conciliation by the two sides. Nixon hopes the fresh impetus he is giving the talks will make Hanoi more willing to negotiate. Signs so far are negative.

Alos on the foreign policy front, the White House said Friday there are no plans to send a U.S. military force into the Middle East, despite the presence of Soviet pilots in Egypt. The Russians are flying defensive combat missions inside the country.

Presidential Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said the U.S. hopes to arrange a de-escalation of the Russian presence in the Mideast through diplomatic negotiations. But he did not rule out the possibility of a military presence to counter Soviet moves in the explosive area at some future point to protect Israel.

had been ordered against the Cambodian border "on the same basis as air interdiction missions" to insure the safety and security of U.S. forces in South Vietnam.

The statement followed reports from military sources saying American guns placed at artillery bases near the Cambodian border had fired 1,500 shells into Cambodia in the first three days after the withdrawal.

President Nixon in reporting on the withdrawal of U.S. forces, said American planes would keep flying missions in Cambodia but the statement today was the first formal acknowledgment of artillery also being used. "When specific targets of enemy troops or supplies are within range of our artillery they may be taken under fire to reduce the threat to friendly forces in the Republic of Vietnam and as we have said many, times, we will conduct protective reaction as an inherent right of self-defense whenever friendly forces in the Republic of Vietnam are endangered from positions in Cambodia," a military spokesman said.

AMERICA

Hope and featuring more than a dozen of America's best known movie and TV stars. And of course, the traditional grand finale of a glorious Fourth —a fireworks display.

The weather was hot and humid, as it's supposed to be on the Fourth. But a 50-50 chance of thundershowers hung over the evening festivities.

Throngs of young people paraded toward the Lincoln Memorial before the religious service began to stake out positions on the Washington Monument slopes for the evening gala.

Their attire — ranging from business suits to shorts for the men and hip-snuggling slacks to Indian dresses for the women —gave the crowd a carnival color. Knots of uniformed policemen were everywhere.

At du Pont Circle, favorite midtown haunt of the hippies, all was quiet. A few young persons sprawling on the grass were watched by a dozen or so foot patrolmen.

Sounding the day's keynote, Graham listed seven reasons why Americans can be proud of their country.

"We honor America" he said, because:

"—She has opened her heart and her doors to the distressed and persecuted of the world.

"—She has been the most generous nation in history . . when a disaster occurs any place in the world, America is there with help and aid.

—"She has never hidden her problems and faults. With our freedom of the press and open communication system, we do not sweep our sins under the rug.

"—She is honestly recognizing and is courageously trying to solve her social problems.

"—She has never sought to use her tremendous power to take over other nations.

"—She defends the right of her citizens to dissent.

"—There is woven into the warp and woof of our nation faith in God."

Graham did not mention the Vietnam war. He had said in advance the observance would be "neither pro-war nor anti-war." His one oblique reference to foreign policy was a suggestion that it should be reviewed "to be sure that our objectives and goals are in keeping with the American dream."

America can solve these and other problems he said, if its people will shake off the mood of "discouragement, despair and negativism" that prevails in the nation today, and rededicate themselves to realizing the "unfinished dream" of their forefathers.

Although he upheld "constructive dissent" as "the hallmark of our priceless freedoms," Graham said that when dissent takes violent and destructive forms, it turns into anarchy. He said the overwhelming majority of Americans have watched with mounting alarm "while a relatively small extremist element, both to the left and to the right, have knocked our courts, desecrated our flag, disrupted our educational system, laughed at our religious heritage, and threatened to burn down our cities."

By turning out to honor America today, he said, this great majority is letting the world know that "in spite of their faults and failures, we still believe in the principles and institutions that made our nation great."

budget Thursday and recessed for a long, three-day weekend. The Senate defeated it 25-13, two short of the 27 necessary for passage.

Admittedly impatient, Reagan, appearing at the second such news conference of the week, said that he had "given" as much as he could for schools when he endorsed $102 million in extra state aid as proposed by a legislative budget rewriting committee.

He repeated his contention that school finance in California was a "long-range" problem that "cannot be solved just by another infusion of money."

"No one of us has any idea today of the real need of the schools or whether that need is based on mismanagement of the money now being distributed or whether that amount of money is too small."

He said next January he planned to work toward solving the "long-range" issue and "if that calls for more money we'll face that problem then. And we'll make a decision then as to the amount and how it should be produced."

But the Democrats insisted that the addition of $180 million on top of the $102 million agreed to by Reagan "will not even improve present school problems."

They also asked Reagan's support for a temporary "workload" budget that would operate state government on a day-to-day basis until a permanent budget was approved.

He refused, saying "I think that would simply insure a year-round session of the legislature with no pressure and necessity at arriving at a permanent budget."

Reagan accused the Democrats of "playing with fire" by delaying budget passage and conceded that he expressed "impatience" and "righteous indignation" with the seven Democrats at the meeting arranged by the Senate Gop leaders.

He accused Democrats of describing the issues in "not accurate statements" and said he would sign the budget without using his blue-pencil item veto power if the legislature would send it to him as approved by a second conference committee.

Gottlieb's Ranch: Not God's Acres

SANTA ROSA (UPI) — The Sonoma County Superior Court has ruled that the Morning Star Ranch is not God's little acres, but indeed belongs to one-time folksinger Louis Gottlieb.

And, ruled Judge Kenneth Eymann, Gottlieb must clean up the 30-acre spread within 30 days because it's a mess.

Eymann Friday told Gottlieb he would have to remove the hippie-type structures built on the ranch since the former folksinger with the Limeliters deeded it to "God" last year and opened it to the world's "religious people."

Gottlieb notarized a deed signing title over to God and it was relucantly recorded May 7, 1969 by County Recorder Herbert Snyder.

Judge Eymann ruled the deed invalid, and said the ranch is "unfit for human habitation." and gave Gottlieb until July 30 to clean it up.

When Gottlieb deeded the ranch to the Lord last year, he advised he would continue to pay the taxes on the property.

"It's preposterous to pay taxes for God," he said. "But for God's sake, I'll pay them.

Philadelphia Selected For Anniversary

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Commision set up to plan celebration of the nation's 200th anniversary has recommended to President Nixon that Philadelphia be the site of an international exposition and a July fourth birthday party in 1976.

Philadelphia nosed out Washington, D.C., Boston and Miami for the honor of being the bicentennial host city, but the commission recommended in a report that all three prepare special observances of their own to focus attention on different aspects of American life.

OTHER PROPOSALS

The report by the 35-member American Revolution Bicentennial Commission also stressed that proposals from many other cities for special events would be considered and approved within the next six years.

Recommendations in the 38-page report that four focal-point cities stage elaborate activities "international in scope" confirmed reports that had filtered from commission sources earler in the week.

But other specific recommendations of the commission were:

—Outfitting of a special promotional ship to tour the world and invite visitors from abroad to the anniversary celebrations.

—That Americans be urged to make a "personal project" of learning at least one foreign language in anticipation of a large number of foreign tourists.

TRAVEL PLAN

—Planning by private and public transportation officials to ensure that fast, low-cost travel by 1976, particularly along the east coast where most of the events will be held.

—Special events at the Winter Olympics at Denver in 1976.

The commission recommended that the year-long celebration be called "Festival of Freedom" and focus on three major themes: Heritage '76, Open House USA and Horizons '76.

'Conspiracy' Seen Against Role Of Public Education

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The president of the 1.1 million member National Education Association warned Friday of "a conspiracy" against education and urged teachers to form a political group to combat it.

"There are some experts in America who are predicing that public education cannot survive the onslaughts leveled against it in 1970," George D. Fischer told the association's 108th convention.

"There appears to be a conspiracy at work to destroy confidence in public education, including a hostile federal administration which has in fact declared war on education."

Fischer included President Nixon in the conspiracy. He said Nixon had cut federal education funds on grounds they were "inflationary" despite approving billions for military purposes.

Other enemies of public education, Fischer said, are racist governors, a new coalition of private segregated schools and profit-making businesses offering to teach reading in public schools on contracts promising to raise pupil achievement to specific levels.

Since crucial decisions are made by elected political leaders, Fischer said, "I will not be satisfied until we are the most powerful lobby in the nation."

Through mergers with other groups, the 45-year-old native of Des Moines, Iowa, foresees his organization embracing all the nation's two million teachers in five years. In a decade, he said both the profession and the association will grow to four million.

"We will pay annual dues of one per cent of each teacher's salary," Fischer said, "which will give the united teaching profession one billion dollars a year to elevate the status of educators and education."

Fischer hopes to have a federal law enacted requiring school districts to negotiate with their teachers and legalizing strikes.

Not only should teachers control the schools, Fischer said, but they must share decision-making authority with their students.

"Our young people have asserted themselves as never before, and in ways which tend to completely baffle our adult population, and have even caused the President and Vice Prsident of the United States to disagree.

"At least 80 or 85 per cent of these young people are reasonable and intelligent. They are not bums and hoodlums," Fischer declared.

"I believe that continued denial of this desire for a 'voice' will drive and is driving them over to the ranks of their radical colleagues," he told the 5,000 delegates.

"Although it may be threatening to many of us here to think of students —college or high school or even younger — helping to create the educational program, I think the NEA must take leadership in working out a better way for student involvement."

Israeli Soldiers Wounded In Shelling From Lebanon

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

Three Israeli soldiers were wounded today when their patrol came under small arms fire from Lebanese territory 21 miles north of the Sea of Galilee, an Israeli military spokesman said. The spokesman said the action occurred near Metullah. He said the Israelis returned the fire.

Arab news media in Beirut continued their denunciations of statements by President Nixon Wednesday night which they considered pro-Israeli.

The newspaper Al Bayraz said today, "The next step is to sever Arab relations with the United States."

The head of the Palestine Liberation Organization office in Beirut, Chafic El-Hout, said, "The Arab states should not only liquidate all U.S. interests in the Arab world but should abandon the camp of positive neutrality and become an integral part of the Socialist camp."

In Moscow, however, an authoritative Middle Eastern source said the Arabs had found some positive elements in the latest U.S. peace proposal and that Egypt and the Soviet Union might not reject it out of hand.

HAWK PEANUT BUTTER

200,000 At Rock Festival In Georgia

BYRON, Ga. (UPI)—Hippies colonized a steaming soybean patch in the heart of Georgia early today, hawked "clinical peanut butter and jelly sandwiches," and made love openly amid upwards of 200,000 young people at a frenzied rock festival.

Traffic continued bumper-to-bumper off interstate 75 and thousands still tried to beg, buy or force their way into the plywood enclosure that is the three day home of the Second Atlanta International Pop Festival.

Generally, the program that began Friday afternoon with intonations from an Indian Guru named Yogi Bhajan, proceeded as smoothly as anyone had dared hope.

Motels were reported filled as far north as Tennessee with persons trying to get to the festival area, 100 miles south of Atlanta. In Atlanta, the normally crowded "Hippie Section" of famed Peachtree Street was strangely deserted.

Late Friday night, a thunderstorm broke the heat spell that has lingered for three days, sending temperatures plumetting 30 degrees under the day's high of 104.

One of the Allman Brothers group performing when the torrential rains began falling looked toward the heavens, raised his arms and said evenly, "out of sight," then continued singing.

One bearded, long-haired youth toted a cardboard box under his arm and shoved his way through the immense throng, singing out "get your clinical peanut butter and jelly sandwiches." What made them "clinical" and made the price one dollar, he claimed, was a liberal lacing with LSD.

Other traders hustled drugs despite an undetermined number of state police and security guards sent in by Gov. Lester Maddox not only to promote order, but to keep a check on drugs.

Throughout the crowd—larger in population than any city in Georgia except Atlanta—young males and females undressed and coupled openly on blankets, drawing hardly a stare.

Maddox, for his part, deplored the entire festival as "one of the worst blights that has ever struck our state.

"It's really sad, when you think that the people who live there are even afraid to leave their homes," he said. "It's regrettable that we have had a moral breakdown so great that we would have to witness this at our own front door."

Police estimated the crowd at 200,000, and promoters said they had an actual head-count of 157,000. But during the evening, 12,000 to 14,000 persons gathered outside the main gate threateningly until the management agreed to admit them without cost. Others paid $14 for a ticket good from Friday through Sunday.

Pope, Lodge In First Meeting

VATICAN CITY (UPI)— Henry Cabot Lodge, the first official U.S. envoy to the Vatican in 20 years, conferred with Pope Paul VI today about world affairs.

The 68-year-old former U.S. Ambassador in Saigon and chief of the American delegation at the Paris peace talks was driven through the Arch of the Bells to the left of the main entrance of St. Peter's Basilica for the meeting with the Pope.

It was their first meeting since Lodge arrived four days ago to take up duties as President Nixon's special envoy, a post which does not entail accreditation as a diplomat to the Holy See.

Shrinking Milk Jugs

SALEM, Ore. (UPI) —The Oregon Department of Agriculture ordered 20,000 plastic milk jugs destroyed because they had shrunk. The jugs, each supposed to hold a gallon of milk, could be filled with only 1½ ounces less than a gallon. Officials say the plastic shrank when run through hot water cleaning cycles at the dairy.

Jackie Gleason Gets His Wish: Quiet Wedding

ASHFORD, England (UPI)—Jackie Gleason wanted a quiet wedding and he got it today when he married Beverly McKittrick, a 37-year-old former Baltimore secretary, in the small registry office of this town on the outskirts of London.

Only 30 persons, most of them Saturday shoppers who just happened by, saw the 54-old television star arrive with Miss McKittrick in a tan Rolls-Royce to say their vows. Gleason was divorced 10 days ago from his wife of 32 years.

Burglary Case Is Under Study

The case of John Lauren Mott, 18, of San Rafael, accused of burglarizing the DeLong Chevrolet showroom in San Rafael on June 24, has been referred to the probation department for a report on whether he can be tried in Marin Juvenile Court.

He is to return to Marin Municipal Court July 17.

A companion, Barry Royal Hier, 17, of San Rafael, arrested with Mott in the rafters of the agency, was booked into Marin Juvenile Hall.

Probation, Fines In Marijuana Case

Judge Alvin H. Goldstein Jr. of Marin Municipal Court yesterday placed Lester Patrick Pendleton, 23, and Emily Link Killibrew, 25, both of San Francisco, on six months' probation and fined them $75 each for misdemeanor marijuana possession counts.

The couple was arrested Feb. 21 when they were found sleeping in a makeshift tent behind an Inverness summer residence.

"Problems of Black Economic Development" will be the topic of the weekly San Rafael Rotary Club meeting Monday at 12:15 p.m. at the West End Villa.

Addressing the Rotarians will be Rev. Eugene Turner, executive director of the office of ethnic church affairs of the Presbyterian Church in San Francisco.

If you don't get the point of this new research*, you're losing customers

The percentages of women planning, shopping and spending for each item in a week are very small.

This finding, from the most complete research ever done on the retail customer, is nothing to brush off lightly. (Unless you want to brush off business).

Let's see what it means: Take women's dresses. Only 7 women out of 100 interviewed in Week I planned to buy a dress soon. In Week II, 5 out of 100 actually shopped for a dress. And only 3 bought. But the ones who bought weren't necessarily among the 7 who planned to buy!

This pattern is true for every item in all stores, except food and drug-sundries (the necessities). The market is fantastically small on any given day, in any given week. It is not a huge, faceless group just waiting for your merchandise.

Take major appliances: the findings show that 16,700 women must be reached to sell every 100 major appliances sold in all stores in town in a week!

And wouldn't you know it? Three out of four items bought by women in the second week of the survey weren't even planned in the first week. So, those who plan don't necessarily buy, and those who buy didn't even know a few days before that they would soon make a purchase decision!

The point is: no store can know when or where women will actually buy. If you're out of the market with your advertising you're out of sight, out of mind. But if you're in, with a consistent schedule of smaller-space ads to supplement your larger ads, you draw this ever-changing, dynamic market to you. You turn "planners" into buyers of your items. And you get the random buyer to become an actual purchaser.

Your ads in the Independent-Journal give you "market command." Because here you reach 70% of all Marin County households. You reach a tremendous audience. And you get immediate response. Just a better way of doing more business. Call your I-J Ad-Man now and make this research work for you.

Typographical Error In Jobless Claims

A typographical error in a story in yesterday's Independent-Journal gave the number of initial unemployment compensation claims in Marin in June of 1968 as 172. The correct number is 572.

There were 1,050 such claims last month.

Pitching A No-Hitter Can Be A Shaking Experience

ANAHEIM (UPI) — Clyde Wright was in a pitcher's dream of heaven today as he received baseball's acclaim for hurling the first no-hitter in the American League and the second of the year.

The California Angels southpaw reached the pinnacle for a pitcher by hurling a 4-0 no-hit victory over the Oakland Athletics Friday night.

Wright said for a moment he couldn't realize he had achieved a hurler's promised land.

Friday would have been a memorable occasion for Wright anyway. In pregame ceremonies he was inducted into the NAIA Hall of Fame for his undergraduate pitching at Carson-Newman College in Jefferson City, Tenn.

Wright achieved his no-hitter while walking three men and striking out only one batter and the victory gave him a 12-5 record after he had scored only one win last year against eight losses.

The only other no-hitter in the major leagues this year was by Dock Ellis of the Pittsburgh Pirates against the San Diego Padres in the first game of a doubleheader at San Diego.

"There's no way to describe it inside," Wright said when asked about his feelings when he realized he had pitcher a no-hitter.

"It's both an empty and a happy feeling. Then I saw Jim Spencer coming at me and I saw Jim Fregosi with that wide grin of his and I knew I had it."

The hurler said he really became aware he was working on a no-hitter after the sixth inning.

"It began to bother me a little. I saw nothing but zeros. I wish someone would have said something about it. It gets pretty lonely. When we were at bat in the seventh inning, I just sat in the runway to the clubhouse shaking."

Wright required but 98 pitches to wind up the game which took an hour and 51 minutes to complete. It was the first no-hitter by an Angel since Bo Belinsky performed the feat against Baltimore, May 5, 1962, and it was the first one at Anaheim Stadium. Belinsky hurled his no-hitter when the Angels were tenants of the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Wright retired the first 12 A's before he walked Sal Bando to lead off the fifth. After two outs, he walked Dave Duncan but then retired the side. He then retired the next 10 men before Frank Fernandez walked in the ninth.

The crowd of 12,131 was hanging on every pitch but wasn't prepared for the quick conclusion as Felipe Alou grounded to Fregosi who started a game-ending double-play.

Reggie Jackson almost ended Wright's no-hitter in the seventh with a long fly that sent centerfielder Jay Johnstone agaist the wall to make the catch.

Wright, a good fielding pitcher, also aided his own cause by gloving a hard line drive by Dick Green in the third which almost took off his arm and would have been a base hit but for Wright's quickness.

"If I hadn't caught that line drive I would have had about $500 worth of dental work," Wright said.

Joining in the strong defensive effort behind Wright were Alex Johnson, Ken McMullen and Fregosi.

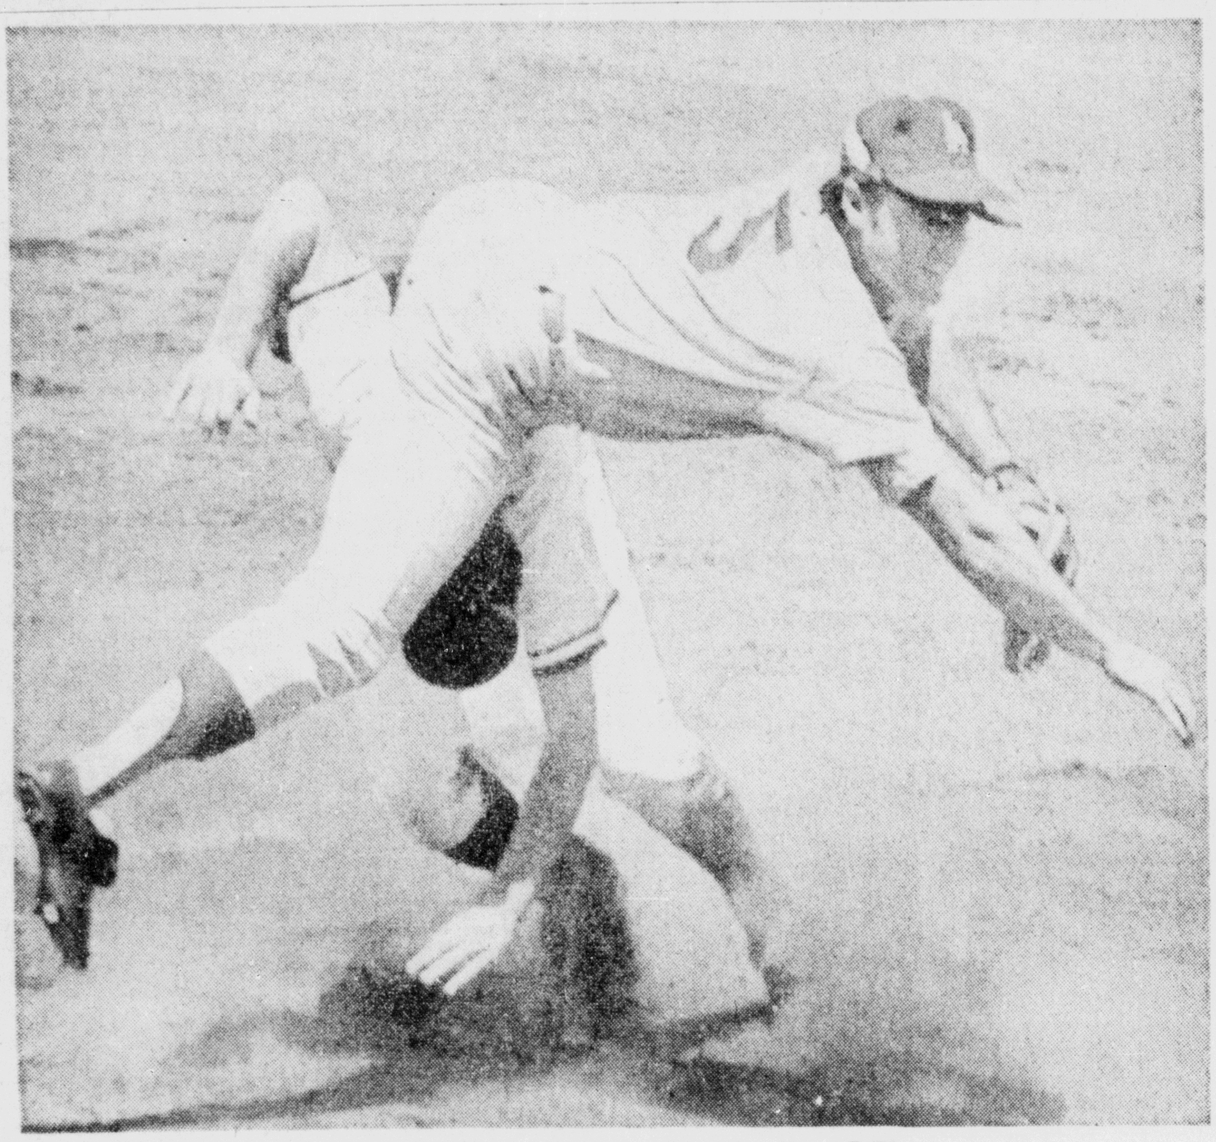
The Angels got Wright the one run he really needed in the first inning when Roger Repoz tripled and scored on Fregosi's grounder. They added three more runs on McMullen's homer in the fourth after Johnson walked and Spencer doubled."

Chuck Dobson was the victim of the no-hit performance and as the losing pitcher his record fell to 7-9 although he held the Angels to four hits in five innings.

General manager Dick Walsh said Wright's no-hitter was worth an additional $500 as a starter on his contract.

The A's and Angels resume action tonight with Rudy May, 4-5, opposing Catfish Hunter, 12-5, in a 6 o'clock game.

CLYDE WRIGHT



GIANTS BITE THE DUST

Giant infielder Bob Heise upset Los Angeles second baseman Jim Lefebvre but too late to avert first inning double play yesterday at San Francisco. The Dodgers, with Willie Davis driving in three runs on a home run, triple and two singles, outslugged the Giants 8-6 in their weekend series opener before 25,330, one of the season's largest crowds at Candlestick Park. Pro Football Owners Shrug Off Rebellion

Sports

Saturday, July 4, 1970 14 Independent-Journal

NEW YORK (UPI)—The National Football League Players Association is threatening to shut down the pre-season training camps for the second time in the last three years but the threat was dismissed by an owners' spokesman Friday night as "irrevelant."

Tex Schramm, the president of the Dallas Cowboys and the head of the owners' committee, said "that action (withholding of services) at this time is really irrelevant. That possibility has been repeated quite often by those not participating in the negotiations and I hardly attach any news value to it at this time."

A spokesman for the players said withholding of services authorization letters were sent to the players on June 25th and that within a week they responded with near unanimous support of the player association's negotiation teams.

BRIEFLY CLOSED

In 1968, several pro football camps were briefly closed in a dispute over exhibition game pay. The players voted to end the strike when the clubs offered up to $350 a year for five-year veterans.

One of the issues at stake in the current negotiations is the players' request that exhibition game pay be raised to a top of $500. But the owners claim this issue is "non-negotiable" because the players agreed two years ago not to seek another exhibition pay raise.

But the emotional issue in the dispute is the players' request that the NFL be recognized legally as a "joint employer" of the 1,800 football pros rather than 26 individual team employers with commissioner Pete Rozelle aligned on the side of the owners.

NON-NEGOTIABLE

The owners are claiming this is an attack on the office of the commissioner and says this is a non-negotiable issue.

The players' attorney, Alan Miller, insists "the commissioner's powers have to be subject to negotiation."

The players have carried their case to the National Labor Relations Board. It has petitioned the NLRB to name the NFL as a joint employer.

The players' threat to strike during the exhibition season is only a token gesture since their salary is based on the 14-game regular season schedule and the players don't like all the exhibition games—especially at only $350 a game.

CANADIAN GOLF OPEN

Old Man Shows The Way

LONDON, Ont. (UPI)—Bob Stone knows about battles—he fought in the Korean War—so he knew when he started that being an "old man" on the professional golf tour it would be a tough fight.

The 40-year old Stone showed his cool on the firing line Friday by shooting his second straight 68 for a 136 total, eight under par, and the lead halfway through the Canadian Open. Trailing Stone by a stroke was former Masters and Canadian Open champion Art Wall, who played the London Hunt and Country Club course in 71 strokes, one under par, Friday.

George Archer, another former Masters winner, was third as his 72 gave him a 138 total, two strokes behind Stone.

Phil Rodgers, Chi Chi Rodriguez and Mike Reasor were all tied at 139.

The two top Canadians, amateur Gary Cowan of Kitchewer, Ont., and Toronto pro Al Balding, were tied at 140 along with Jim Jamieson.

The cut was set at 147, three over par. That left 72 golfers in contention for the two weekend rounds, including eight Canadians.

The London Hunt course, a Robert Trent Jones design, was given pin placements for Friday's round that toughened the going considerably. After 65 golfers matched or beat par Thursday, only 45 did so Friday.

Gibby Gilbert, first-round leader with a course record 65, had a 77 Friday. Sam Snead shot an 80 and missed the cut. Defending champion Tommy Aaron had a 71 and also missed the cut after his Thursday round of 77.

Bob Stone, a father of four and in his third year on the tour, played a cool, steady game. For the second straight day he hit 17 greens in regulation. He putted "extremely well," he said.

"Everything was going for me," said Stone, who was in the U.S. Air Force in Korea from 1949-54. "I think the pins were tougher today but I just seemed to hit it closer to them."

A win in the open would be the first official tour victory for Stone. He won the "satellite" Doral Open this year, but his best official finish so far has been a second at the 1969 Azalea.

Stone, from Independence, Mo., knew that heading out on the pro tour against men much younger than himself would be hard going.

"I knew it was a lot of work," he said.

A member at Stone's home club in Independence has sponsored him. So far, Stone has won $30,000 in his three pro touring years. This year, he has picked up $14,000.

First price in the Canadian Open is $25,000.

Bouton's 'Ball Four' Names Real Names

There is a trend in literature today to write what is known as a "Roman a clef." This is just French for "a novel with a key to it," and it is a literary artifice where the supposed fiction is about real people. Harold Robbins got rich on it. "The Carpetbaggers" was about You-Know-Who. It's not hard to tell who Jacqueline Susann is talking about, either.

The style is not important. It's the content that sells the book. You change the names slightly and the incidents not at all. Salacity sells.

The author, Jim Bouton, has taken the art form another step and into a new dimension. He not only uses real incidents in his "Roman a clef," he uses REAL NAMES.

Is that "Mikey Morton" on the roof of the Shoreham Hotel in Washington leading a squad of major league Peeping Toms watching girls undress in various rooms? No, by God, that's Mickey Mantle himself.

Mickey (himself) Mantle gets a lot of other star parts. Slamming the bus window on the hands of kids asking for autographs, showing up so hung over he had to grope for first base on a home run, pushing kids aside, treating reporters like servants. Erich Von Stroheim gets the role if they make it into a movie.

Playing Golf At 4:30 A.M.

Is that Barry Dell whose wife phoned at 4:30 in the morning on a road trip to be told her husband was "out playing golf"? No, sir, our author scorns these little copouts. That's Gary Bell, the real pitcher, himself. His wife's name is Nan.

Now, then, are these a bunch of pseudonymous stars of stage, screen and radio turning a locker room into a Valley of The Dolls — popping pills like chorus girls to keep their courage up? No, doctor, these are the idols of American youth, real-life stars of the American League West, the members of the Seattle-Milwaukee Pilots-Brewers. That's Frank Meriwell taking a pep pill, son.

Is it true what they say about "stews" (airline hostesses)? "Open your door and you're liable to be invited to a party down the hall," says the author candidly. Do ballplayers make good dates? No, admits author Bouton, they tend to treat a girl like a belt-high fastball. Swing quickly and run.

Ex-Games Star Held Sets Mark

SAN DIEGO (UPI)—Former Olympian and three-time NCAA champion from Stanford Franklin "Bud" Held Friday set a world record for 42-year-old men in the javelin with toss of 229-3 in the second day of competition at the third annual U.S. Masters Track and Field championships.

Held, who was a member of the 1952 U.S.Olympic team, got his record breaking toss in the Masters Six event—a sextathalon consisting of the javelin, shot, long jump, mile, 100 and 440 events.

Held, who won the Masters Six with 3,438 points, topped the old mark of 228 feet by Germany's Emil Werlding.

In the 200 for men over 40, Richard Stolpe, 45, Corona Del Mar (Calif.) Track Club, set a new national mark with a clocking of 23.3.

In the 100, former 400-meter Olympian George Rhoden, 43, Northern California Seniors Track Club, San Francisco, was the winner with a 10.4 timing, while Stolpe, was second with the same clocking.

Clay Exhibition Stirs A Controversy

CHARLESTON, S. C. (UPI)—The promoter of the scheduled six round sparring session for deposed heavyweight boxing champion Cassius Clay Friday said the controversial match is "definitely on."

Promoter Reggie Barrett said no "harassment" is expected for the July 9 exhibition match between Clay and New York City boxer Jeff Merritt.

At least one attempt to prevent the match has failed. A group of five persons in the Charleston area sought to bring a legal case to prevent the fight, but dropped the matter when they were advised that South Carolina state law forbids only prize fighting and does not cover the planned sparring match.

"My advise to those who don't like this fight is to simply stay home and forget it," said Barrett.

"Having Cassius Clay is no more a disgrace than many other things around here," he added.

BOXING CHARITY

Proceeds for the match, to be held at the 4,000 seat county hall, will go to a local boxing charity for underprivilged children, many of them black. Clay will receive only expense money for his appearance.

The match has drawn national attention as it marks the first time the 28-year-old Clay has stepped into a ring in more than two years. He is free pending an appeal on his 1968 conviction for draft evasion.

"Clay has agreed to do this benefit for our fund-raising program," said Barrett. "The contracts are signed and we're ready to go as scheduled."

COOL RECEPTION

Some members of the Charleston news media have given the match a rather cool reception and little advance publicity.

"That's all right with me," Barrett said. "I just don't want them trying to stir up controversies and create more problems. After all, I am within the laws of the state. I have a city license and I have rented the auditorium."

A letter to a Charleston newspaper labeled the match "a shame and disgrace to every Charlestonian."

City officials have remained silent and have indicated they have no intention of seeking to prevent the match.

TV SHOWING

Barrett said Friday the American Broadcasting Co. is planning to tape the fight for replay on the ABC "Wide World of Sports" program on Saturday, July 11.

He said he expects the fight to be a sellout.

"I've had letters from people and community organizations from both Carolinas and Georgia who want to see the match," said Barrett. "Some well-known celebrities from New York have also written me about coming, but I'd rather not say who at this time."

Ten amateur matches will precede the Clay-Merritt exhibition. Prices for the exhibition are scaled from $6 to $10.

No, The Phillies Aren't Cheating

PHILADELPHIA (UPI)—Are the fifth-place Phillies cheating?

That was the impression given fans at Connie Mack Stadium after Friday night's game when plate umpire Bob Engel ordered the ground crew to measure the pitching mound. The inspection was strictly routine.

"All fields are checked from time to time by the National League," explained Larry Shenk of the Phillies' publicity office. "The umpires check the distance, the height and the slope of the mound. We came through with flying colors."

Flag Is Illegal On Baseball Suit

BOSTON (UPI) — American League umpire Ed Runge ordered an American Flag put away Friday night during the Red Sox-Indians game at Fenway Park, even though it was the eve of the Fourth of July.

Runge said he wasn't opposed to displaying the flag, but it violated baseball rules concerning uniforms.

Sohner Softballers Rally To Victory

Sohner Tree Service softballers of Marin County scored five times in the seventh inning to gain a 6-3 verdict over Flying Goose Sporting Goods of San Francisco last night in San Francisco.

Sohner righthander Jess Munyon limited the losers to two hits.

Kentucky Derby Executive Dies

Knebelkamp, the silver-haired former president of Churchill Downs who became known as "Mr. Kentucky Derby," died Friday of a heart attack. He was 69.

A friendly good-will ambassador for the Derby, Knebelkamp served for 11 years as president of Churchill Downs before he turned the reins over to Lynn Stone last Dec. 31 and entered semi-retirement in the role of a consultant to the track.

Tennis

SAN JOSE — James Connors of Los Angeles was the only Californian to advance to the semi-finals Friday in 18-year-old boys' singles at the California Junior Tennis Championships. Connors, who will join UCLA's championship tennis team next year, defeated James Hagey of La Jolla, 6-2, 6-3 in quarterfinals action at the San Jose Swimming and Tennis Racquet Club.

Baseball

OAKLAND — The Oakland A's have announced the signing of righthanded pitcher Alan Griffin of Hermosa Beach, Calif. The lanky 18-year-old Griffin will report to the A's farm club at Coos Bay, Ore., in the Northwest League.

At Mira Costa High School this year he posted a 1.10 earned run average and struck out 52 batters in 41 innings.

Auto Racing

WATKINS GLEN, N.Y. — Mario Andretti of Media, Pa., and Jacky Ickx of Belgium have been named to drive one of two factory Ferraris in the six hours of endurance for the world championship of manufacturers auto race July 11 at Watkins Glen.

The six hours will "green flag" an international road racing doubleheader with the Glen Can-Am "200" following some 26 hours later on July 12.

Pro Basketball

INDIANAPOLIS — Roger Brown, high scoring forward for the Indiana Pacers, is spending the Fourth of July holiday in a hospital recuperating from knee surgery. Brown, who scored 98 points in two crucial playoff games when the Pacers won the American Basketball Association title, had surgery Thursday for removal of a sac between the tendon and bone in his left knee.

Motorcycle Racing

Boxing

MEXICO CITY — Jose Napoles, the world welterweight champion, will make his next title defense in November against Johann Orsolics of Australia. Promoter George Parnnassus of Los Angeles, representing Austrian promoter Wieler Stathalle, said the Cuban-born champion had agreed to meet Orsolics Nov. 12 in Vienna.

pulent," it's Joe Cronin, the name he was born with. The book is called "Ball Four." It should be called "Brushback."

It's not a Book-of-the-Month Club selection. It nowhere resembles Bruce Catton, or "Stonehenge Decoded," or the "Girl From Fitchburg" or "The Key to Feminine Response in Marriage." It's not even an alternate-choice with book dividend given.

Like most literary departments, it has driven the critics to paroxysms of fury. The usual lace-cuff, deft reviews ("Subtle," "Charming," "Shows the writer's master of allegory," or "A tribute to the human spirit," or "Comes to grips with the basic ills of our time") are passed over in favor of "Spy!," "Violates privacy!," "Meretricious!," "Entrapment!" Baseball writers as critics, tend to run more to "Kill the umpire!" rather than the "Shows promise but needs editing" persuasion.

At A Literary Tea Level

I bearded the author in the locker room at Dodger Stadium the other night. I wanted to keep the discussion at a literary tea level and do not indulge in vulgar personalities. "I, er, I thought it had Dickensian dimensions. The part about Mickey, er, What's-His-Name? Reminiscent of Sydney Carton. Oliver Twist. Nicholas Nickleby. Overtones of 'Kafka,'" I murmured. (That's what you're supposed to do in conversations with authors.)

"Yes." said the author. "I just didn't want to write another Golly, Gee-Whiz sports book, y'know?"

"Well," I said hastily, "you certainly avoided THAT. You centainly got well away from the Louisa Mae Alcott-Burt L. Standish-Ralph Henry Barbour school. I do feel you showed some Truman Capote influence. A smattering of Updike. The kissing scenes on the back-of-the-team bus. Have you thought of it as a musical? 'The Boys on the Team' sort of thing?"

"It's a best-seller," offered Bouton, hopefully.

I winced. "Please," I said. "Please don't put yourself on a vulgar plane with Susann, Robbins, Wallace and those other potboilers. You have pioneered new directions in literature. We'll call it the 'Knuckleball School of Writing.' No more 'My Life at Bat' by Home-Run Harrigan. Your next book should be titled 'The Unofficial Scorer.'"

Marin Cars To Race At Sonoma

Bill Castagnaro of Sausalito and George Pridmore of Tiburon will be featured in the national championship Sonoma Summersport auto races July 11-12 at Sears Point International Raceway.

Castagnaro and Pridmore both have filed for the major point race, the only national sports car event set for Northern California this year.

Both will see action in the Production H race with Castagnaro at the helm of an Austin Healey Sprite and Pridmore set for the wheel of a Formula Ford.

A total of eight races have been planned for the weekend by the Sports Car Club of America with drivers bidding for a place on the California team to run in the All American Racing Championships planned for Texas in late fall.

The weekend speedfest shows four races set for Saturday starting at 2:30 p.m. and four events on the program for Sunday. Qualifications for each race will be held beginning at 10 a.m. each morning.

Tickets are on sale for the Sonoma Summersport at Sears Point, at all Macy's, Ticketron and Sears stores.

Chinese Gal Steals Show In AAU Track

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—Chi Cheng of Nationalist China and U.S. Olympian Barbara Ferrell clash today in the sprint finals of the 47th annual National AAU Women's track and field championships and world records could result.

Miss Chi, competing for the Los Angeles Track Club, in Friday's preliminary events broke the 220 yard world record and equalled the recognized world mark in the 100.

The shapely Cal Poly of Pomona star ran the 220 in 22.6, three-tenths of a second under the listed record and one-tenth under her own pending mark of 22.7. In the 100 she won in 10.3 to equal the mark she shares with Marlene Mathews Willard of Australia and Wyomia Tyus, but three-tenths slower than her own pending mark set June 13 at Portland, Ore.

NO TROUBLE

Miss Ferrell won her sprint heats in 10.4 and 23.5 without too much difficulty.

In other top performances, Beth Bonner, Morgantown, W.Va., set a new national record of 9:48.1 in the 3,000 meters. The old mark was 9:54.4 set by Doris Brown of Seattle earlier this year.

The Atoms (N.Y.) Track Club team of Michelle McMillan, Shelley Marshall, Gale Fitzgerald and Sheryl Toussaint broke the American record in the mile relay with a mark of 3:44.5. The old mark of 3:46.2 was set by the same group earlier this year.

MEET MARK

Mayor Daley's Youth Foundation team of Kathleen Jones, Willye White, Mamie Rallins and Maeoper West set a meet mark of 1:43.5 in the 800 medley relay.

In the 880 yard run Terry Haul of Knoxville, Tenn., Track Club won her heat in 2:06.8. She was followed by Miss Toussaint of the Atoms T.C. in 2:06.9. Francie Johnson of the Michigans won the other heat in 2:09.4.

The Kissing Bandit In Trouble

PASADENA, Calif. (UPI)—Exotic dancer Morgana Roberts, the kissing bandit who has bussed major league baseball players on diamonds from coast-to-coast, has pleaded innocent in municipal court to two counts of indecent exposure.

The buxom Miss Roberts, who measures an estimated 42-22-36, failed to gain custody, however of a snake and a puppet used in her dancing act.

The puppet and reptile were taken as evidence by police when she was arrested last Friday and Monday on suspicion of indecent exposure. The charges stemmed from her performances at two clubs, according to court records.

Miss Roberts has chased and planted kisses on the Reds' Pete Rose in Cincinnati, Clete Boyer of the Braves in Atlanta, the Senator's Frank Howard in Washington, California's Billy Cowan in Anaheim, and most recently the Dodgers' Wes Parker in Los Angeles.

Court Dismisses Water District Fish Kill Case

A criminal charge against the Marin Municipal Water District stemming from the killing of about 3,000 fish was dismissed yesterday in Marin Municipal Court when it was reported the company has purchased between 7,000 and 8,000 fingerlings for restocking.

Deputy Dist. Atty. Peter Mitchell also said that the company has installed machinery to correct problems which caused a broken line from which alum poured into Lagunitas and Paper Mill creeks in Samuel P. Taylor Park. The fishkill occurred in April.

Mitchell said that the baby fish had cost the water district $1,730.

The company had been charged with a section of the fish and game code which makes it a crime to discharge substances harmful to fish into creeks.

Aaron's Sub Goes On Homer Spree

By NEIL HERSHBERG
UPI Sports Writer

San Diego manager Preston Gomez chuckled after glancing at the Braves' lineup and noticing that Mike Lum was playing in place of Henry Aaron. But Lum wound up getting the last laugh.

Lum, a reserve outfielder of Chinese-Hawaiian extraction, hit three home runs Friday night to pace Atlanta to an 8-1 victory over the Padres in the first game of a twi-night doubleheader. The Braves took the nightcap 9-4 on homers by Rico Carty, Aaron and Orlando Cepeda.

Lum, who entered the game with a career total of five homers, was playing in place of Aaron, who is third only to Babe Ruth and Willie Mays in lifetime homers with 577.

But Lum had a perfect night as he hit a two-run homer in the second, walked with the bases loaded in the third and hit solo homers in the fifth and seventh innings to drive in a total of five runs, only one less than he had driven in all last season. The homers "erased all doubts about my ability to hit the long ball," the 25-year old Lum said. "It sure renewed my confidence."

MORE HOMERS

In the second game, Carty, who also hit a homer in the opener, hit a three-run drive, his 20th of the season, in the first inning. Aaron hit a two-run homer, his 24th, to highlight a four-run second inning, and Cepeda hit a two-run homer, his 14th, in the fifth.

In other National League action, Pittsburgh outslugged Chicago 16-14, New York downed Philadelphia 4-3, St. Louis defeated Montreal 9-7, Los Angeles beat San Francisco 8-6 and Cincinnati and Houston divided a doubleheader with the Reds winning the opener 3-0 and the Astros taking the second game 10-4.

In the American League, Kansas City swept a twinbill from Milwaukee 5-3 and 4-3, Minnesota tripped Chicago 8-2, Baltimore blanked Detroit 4-0, Washington edged New York 4-3, Boston took both ends of a doubleheader from Cleveland 2-1 and 5-4 and California, behind Clyde Wright's no-hitter, beat Oakland 4-0.

WILD GAME

Gene Alley capped a three-run ninth inning rally with his second homer of the game as the Pirates beat the Cubs in a wild game featuring eight homers and 40 hits.

Pinch-hitter Donn Clendenon singled in two runs in the ninth inning to lead the Mets to their win over the Phillies. Ray Sadecki allowed seven hits in eight innings to pick up the victory.

Lou Brock hit a three-run homer and Richie Allen added a two-run shot in the Cardinals victory over Montreal which snapped the longest winning streak in Expo history at five games. Brock's homer highlighted a five-run second inning and Allen's homer, his 22nd, came in the seventh inning.

The Astro's erupted for four runs in the sixth inning and went on to their victory over Cincinnati after the Reds won the opener behind Gary Nolan's five-hit pitching. The Astros pounded five Red pitchers for 12 hits in winning the nightcap while pinning the loss on Tony Cloninger. Tom Griffin went the first five innings to pick up the victory.

BOWLING TIPS

By MARION LADEWIG

A too-high backswing is infrequently an answer for achieving additional ball speed. In fact, this "ceiling reach" often causes women bowlers to lose their balance on the downswing. No wonder. Having the ball come down below shoulder level for best from such a height would shake anyone. During the backswing keep the ball at or results.

"Who says a sailboat has to cost more than $695?"

In knocking around the racing circuit for years, I've seen a lot of people who were interested in a small sailboat but at board boat prices. Preferably a one-design racing class boat, complete with sails that can be handled by a beginner, but still challenges the experienced sailor. "It can't be done," I said. I'm Dick Reid.* Then one day while languishing off the pace in one of the national races, I thought "Why not?" So I developed the Banshee. In all modesty this little masterpiece has it all... one design racing class, planes easily, can be carried on your car, and cost only $695! Look over the specifications. You'll see why the Banshee has to be one of the best boat buys you'll ever make.

*Flying Juniors built by Dick Reid captured 4 firsts and 2 seconds in the last 6 national championships.

Underlining Sheer Fabric Gives Body To The Garment

By EUNICE FARMER

DEAR EUNICE,

I am making a sheer dress of polyester and cotton mixture. This dress has a 12-gore skirt. The gores begin at the yoke just below the neckline. Should I line this dress or will it be too heavy with all the gores lined?

MISS A. H.

DEAR MISS A.H.,

"Whether to line or underline" that must be the most asked question I ever get from my readers. Once again I must tell you that there is no set rule for either fabric or pattern, but both must be taken into consideration. Underlining gives a little more body to any garment. How much body depends on the weight of the underlining fabric. A separate lining doesn't change the line of the dress; it simply eliminates the need for wearing a slip. In your case, there would be no special rule; it would depend entirely on the effect you wish your dress to achieve. If you wish it to fall in soft folds from the many gores, do not underline it. Since it is sheer fabric, however, you may wish to add a separate lining so that your dress will look like the same color throughout.

If you wish this same dress to have a shaped-A-line appearance with a crisper look, by all means underline each section. Treat the two layers as if they were one and proceed with your construction. For the past few years we have underlined almost everything.

Now, with softer fabrics making their appearance and more fullness in the bodices and skirts, perhaps we will get away from underlining to a degree. I have always felt that underlining keeps the garment from wrinkling and adds to its general appearance.

MRS. FLOYD Lindberg, McKeesport, Pa., is winner of the Tailor Trix pressing board this week for her suggestion:

"When a belt that matches your dress is just a little too short for comfort, I add about an inch of elastic to the buckle end. When worn, this doesn't show because it is covered by the other end of the belt extension, and it really works out fine."

To all my readers: Please gather together your helpful little hints and send them to me. They may be simple and old to you, but there are always new sewers today who really love new ideas. Besides, you might be one of our lucky winners of the Tailor Trix pressing board. Just send your winning suggestions or sewing tips to Eunice Farmer, in care of the Independent-Journal.

DEAR EUNICE,

Recently a question came up about top-stitching the edges of a collar. Before top-stitching the collar looked fine, then, after it was applied and was top-stitched, it rolled up at the ends. Did the top-stitching cause my collar to change its appearance?

MRS. R.R.L.

DEAR MRS. R.R.L., No, your top-stitching had nothing to do with the way the collar rolls. This could be stitched before applying the collar or after the collar was applied. The only reason you didn't notice the fact that your collar didn't roll properly before it was top stitched was that the facing, perhaps, rolled out slightly in order to make the top collar slightly larger. By top-stitching, the facing couldn't peek out anymore, and consequently your poor constuction. showed.

In order for a collar to roll beautifully, you must realize that the top collar must be slightly larger than the undercollar. After you have stitched, clipped, turned and pressed the outer edges of your collar, roll it over your fingers just as it will be applied to the neckline of your garment. Don't try to keep the neck edges even. Pin through all thicknesses of your collar just below the seamline at the neck, holding this extra fullness in position — now apply to your garment. The seam allowance of your undercollar will always be 5/8 inches; the top collar seam allowance might vary depending on the thickness of your fabric. The neckline facing will cover up any variation in the width of the seam allowance. This is the only way you can be sure of always having a collar you will be proud of. Incidentally, this is one of the easiest "give-aways" of that homemade look in sewing, so by all means perfect this technique. You'll be amazed at your results if you haven't used this little magic trick.

DEAR EUNICE,

When lining a suit, what is the purpose of sewing the sleeve linings in separately by hand? It's so much trouble and doesn't make much sense to me. I've also noticed that on ready-made suits and coats, the sleeve linings have been sewn by machine to the coat lining, then the whole lining stitched into the coat.

MRS. H.H.

DEAR MRS. H.H.:

Sewing the sleeve linings in by hand has many advantages: the body of your garment is lined first, the lining fits perfectly to this area. You permanently baste the lining around the armholes to keep it in position, also permanently basting the underarm of your lining to the underarm seam of your garment. Then the sleeve linings are pinned in place, allowing for the ease at the cap of the sleeve. Slip-stitch the sleeve lining in place at the seamline.

We must never compare a custom finished garment with a factory made garment. Production costs are so high that the techniques employed to put a garment together must be the best for the least amount of money. When you sew, it is wonderful to have so much pride in your garment that you would like it finished as beautifully as if it was an original garment tailored individually for you.

Set-in-sleeves take perhaps more skill than any other operation in dressmaking. If you would like a copy of "All About Sleeves" by Eunice Farmer, please send 10 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Eunice Farmer, in care of the Independent-Journal.

HELEN HELP US!

By HELEN BOTTEL

DEAR HELEN

My mother works in the business office of one of the major department stores. She says the word has gone out that midi will not be in this fall and winter — too many women against it. So this store and others in its chain are stocking only a few — and expecting a higher than average rate of return. Buyers say skirts will go down an inch or two but not drastically.

Thought you'd like to know that we girls can win if we put our minds to it and complain together. By the way, how many votes against the midi-length skirt did you finally get?

CALIFORNIA GIRL

DEAR CALIFORNIA:

I gave up counting after 10,000, but I'm still getting petitions that carry over 500 names and addresses each. . .And also letters from various parts of the country reporting that stores have returned their midi stock because it gathers dust on the racks. H.

DEAR HELEN:

A boy asked why girls buy boys' pants. Simple: They're long enough. I can't understand why manufacturers underestimate the modern female leg. I'm 5 feet 5½ inches, which is average, but because I'm slender, the girls' pants I try on hit me above the ankle. If I get the extra-longs they bag in the seat. Why can't they design long pants for slim girls? — SLIM JANE

DEAR SLIM:

The least they can do is give us a three-inch hem. And this goes for dresses too. In these days of uncertain lengths, the skirt which has an ample hem won't scare prospective buyers away. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

I'm 13 and my mother refuses to let me close my bedroom door when I have kids over.

When you and your girl friends want to talk, you like privacy. She thinks I'm trying to shut out the rest of the world. What do you think? — JOYCE

DEAR JOYCE:

Your mother is the boss, so I can only tell you that our daughters have the same right to close their bedroom doors as we do — and when a door is closed at our house, one knocks before entering. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

I had to write this letter to anyone who resents his or her mother. I once had a mother to talk to, but when my parents were separated, I spent many nights crying in my pillow, while I stayed with my aunt. Dad was a problem drinker. He finally got back on his feet and tried to make it up to my brothers and sister and me.

In the meantime, I learned my mother was moving to Michigan, over a thousand miles away. More tears on the pillow. I had a big decision — stay with my Dad who needed me or go with the rest of the family. I had to turn on one or the other, but if everybody left Dad, he might go back to drinking.

It hurts — having no mother, no brothers, no sister near me. I'd give anything to come home from summer school tomorrow to see my mother, even if she hollered at me. I'd love to find my "bratty" little sis, my "smart-alec" brother, my "miserable" 10-year-old brother, and my little Denny waiting for me — even if I had to babysit them.

If there are kids out there who think they don't need anybody, well they're not even fooling themselves. — STILL CRYING

P.S. Right now I still have something wonderful: My father is the best there is.

This column is dedicated to family living, so if you're having kid trouble or just plain trouble, let Helen help you. Address Helen Bottel in care of the Independent-Journal.

Mick Jagger's New Chick Is A New York Actress

London Express Service

LONDON — Rolling Stone Mick Jagger has lost little time in filling that gap in his life caused by the transference of Marianne Faithfull's affections to Irish Peer Lord Rossmore.

Marianne, 23, and old Etonian Lord Rossmore, 39, are expected to announce their engagement shortly. Meanwhile, Jagger's affections have been diverted to 19-year-old New Yorker Patti D'Arbanville.

Miss D'Arbanville, who came to London from Paris two years ago to buy some clothes and decided to stay on, met Jagger two weeks ago.

Since then they have been inseparable. She has even taken an apartment almost next door to Mick's in Cheyne Walk.

Patti, who has modeled for top international photographers Richard Avedon, Bert Stern and Patrick Lichfield, has just completed her first leading role as an actress.

"Mick is so exciting but at the same time so peaceful to be with. We don't have to go anywhere exotic to enjoy life," she says.

Today is Saturday, July 4, the 185th day of 1970 with 180 to follow.

The moon is between its new phase and first quarter. The morning stars are Mercury and Saturn. The evening stars are Venus, Mars and Jupiter.

Draft-age men in the United States born on this date are number 279 in the lottery.

On this day in history:

In 1802 the United States Military Academy was opened at West Point, N.Y. with the arrival of ten cadets.

In 1826 former Presidents John Adams and Thomas Jefferson died.

In 1968 Alec Rose returned to Britain after having sailed alone around the world in 354 days.

A thought for the day: British poet Richard Trench said, "Lord, what a change within us one short hour spent in thy presence will prevail to make."

Crash-Protection Air Bags Get Volpe Push

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Transportation Secretary John A. Volpe says he will push for mandatory installation of crash-protection air bags in all cars sold in the United States after Jan. 1, 1973.

Volpe said the life saving potential of the devices makes their widespread use "more than justified." Automobile industry spokesmen have claimed they need more time to stuly the proposal, but Volpe told members of Congress Thursday "I intend to push this important safety advance to the utmost and welcome your support."

HOW TO PLAY

WINNING BRIDGE

By Refusing First Heart Trick South Can Score 4-Spade Victory

The latest figures from the medical profession show that nine million people were punched in the nose during the fiscal year ending June 30. Not all of these required medical attention, and some of them were gin rummy players. But my sacred oath as a reporter compels me to reveal that quite a few of these bashed beaks resulted from a bridge player's haste in winning the first trick.

GOES T OACE

West led the ten of hearts, East put up the king, and South took the ace at once. South had lost an ace 15 years earlier, and he didn't want it to happen again.

South drew four rounds of trumps and then wondered which ace to knock out. He'd have been safe, and his nose would have been untouched, if he had led clubs, but he actually went after the diamonds.

East took the ace of diamonds and led the jack of hearts. West overtook with the queen and continued with the nine of hearts, forcing South to ruff. This was safe because South had discarded a heart from dummy on the fourth trump.

NO CLUB TRICK

Now South was out of trumps. When declarer eventually got around to leading clubs, West took the ace of clubs and two good hearts.

South could have made his contract by refusing the first heart. He wins the next heart, draws trumps and leads a diamond. East takes the ace of diamonds but cannot continue the attack because he is out of hearts. South keeps his last trump and can thus safely knock out the ace of clubs.

FROM LESSON

You probably remember this kind of play from your no-trump lessons. You often refuse the first trick when you have two stoppers in the enemy's suit. You have two stoppers here also, except that one of them is a trump. The principle is the same.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes.

You hold:
♠- J 4 2
♥- 7 5 3 2
♦- K Q J
♣- J 10 6.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two hearts. The raise of a major suit is slightly more encouraging than the response of 1-no-trump. If partner has a long, but broken trump suit he may need only a promise of trump support to bid a sound game.

Using Cars Deserved Penalty, Judge Says

OAKLAND (UPI) — Welfare workers who used Alameda County cars to attend an employes' rally for higher wages deserved a three-day suspension, a Superior Court judge has ruled.

Judge Lyle Cook, who upheld the Board of Supervisors action Thursday, said the seven employes should search their consciences "to determine if their action inspired public trust in county government."

THE FLOWER OF ATLANTIS

The single flower that has graced Sausalito's controversial drydocks (right) may transform itself into a gigantic wooden lotus blossom if the backers of Project Atlantis have their way. Plans to turn the educational-creative center were announced this week by Sausalito drydocks into a cultural-sculptor Christopher Roberts, who owns the structures, and Gate Five Design Institute Inc., the group which plans to design and carry out construction of the center. Their plans call for rearranging the drydocks so that open ends face on water on all four sides (below left). The blossom-like frames (below center) would be added, the frames filled in and stain glass windows added (below right), and $2 million later, the center would be open for business. All that is needed to make their dream come true is the $2 million and permission from the Marin County Board of Supervisors and the City of Sausalito. County Counsel Douglas J. Maloney, however, said the county was not giving up its long-standing legal fight for removal of the drydocks from Richardson Bay.

Fair Nearing Finale

As attendance surpassed 15,000, the 25th Marin Art and Garden Fair headed into a holiday weekend windup today.

Yesterday's total brought attendance thus far to 15,741, compared with 13,419 last year. A Thursday attendance figure of 45,044 supplied the Independent-Journal was incorrect and should have read 4,544. Also, attendance for the second day last year was not 46,049, as reported to the I-J yesterday, but 4,649.

Fair gates will be open until 10 p.m. today. Activities will include barber shop singing, at 7 p.m., and a performance by the Pacific Ballet at 8:30 p.m.

The schedule:

TONIGHT

45 Acres Destroyed In Grass Fire

A grass fire possibly started by children playing with matches charred 45 acres of remote land in Novato yesterday, requiring the Novato Fire Department to request aid from other Marin County departments.

Fire Chief Jack Kidder said the blaze was spotted at 11:16 a.m. in a remote area off Carnoustie Drive. Six of his units fought the fire, assisted by 40 men from Hamilton Air Force Base, a bulldozer and tool truck from the Marin County Fire Department and a plane from the U.S. Forest Service which made three chemical drops.

In addition, a unit from the Kentfield Fire Department stood by at the main fire station to handle other fire calls, Kidder said.

"Because of the remote location, we couldn't get our trucks close enough," Kidder said. "We had to hand carry all our equipment in."

By 2 p.m. the blaze was under control and mop-up crews left the scene at 9 p.m. An investigation of the fire was to be made today, Kidder said.

Tam Trustees To Hold Special Meet

The Tamalpais High School District board will hold a special meeting at 7:30 p.m. Monday to discuss rearranging the district office facilities before its regular meeting at 8 p.m. in the board room.

The board also is to act on several resolutions empowering the new superintendent, Wilber D. Hawkins, to act for the district. Business Mgr. Frank Cassou will report on the building program and on priority lists for maintenance and repairs of school buildings for the summer.

BEST PLACE TO VIEW FIREWORKS

The best place to view the Larkspur-Corte Madera fireworks display at 9:10 p.m. today is the vacant lot next to the Bon Air Shopping Center, according to Larkspur Fire Chief William C. Shurtz.

He said that last year so many tried to drive into the Piper Park area that some missed the show because of the resulting jam. The park is across Corte Madera Creek from the empty lot, Shurtz said.

Assailant Takes Woman's Purse

A Sausalito woman was thrown to the ground and her purse stolen by an unidentified assailant last Saturday night, Sausalito police reported yesterday.

Margaret Georgetti of 40 Cazneau Avenue told police she was walking up a path to her home about 11:40 p.m. when a man, about 6 feet tall, 190 pounds, wearing a white T-shirt, knocked her down, grabbed the purse and ran.

The purse contained no cash, police said, but did hold credit cards.

EXPERIENCED SESSIONS

'Center For Human Potential' Set

A summer "center for human potential," consisting of five lecture-discussion meetings and a series of group experience sessions, is being sponsored by the Marin Community Mental Health Center.

The group sessions will start Monday with a meeting for teen-agers at 7:30 p.m. in the Newman Center, 850 College Avenue, Kentfield. The teen sessions will be held each Monday under the general title "As You Like It for Teens," with the young people to help decide the form and activities to be explored. Plans include psychodrama and group dynamics, according to Connie Lashbrook, mental health educator coordinating the programs.

Other group sessions will be aimed at families, couples, single adults, women, and the "cross-generational groups.

Aim of the sessions is to "help people focus their energies," said Michael Kaplan, who will lead several of them.

"A lot of potential is tied up in human beings," Mrs. Lashbrook said. "We want to help make lives mean more than they do, by helping people zero in on some of their problems . . . help them identify their strengths and resources."

The lecture-discussion meetings, to be held at 8:15 p.m. at the mental health center, will start July 15 when Marc Pilisuk, a professor of community mental health, will speak on the impact of American foreign policy on personal life.

Rev. Edward L. Peet, minister of older persons at Glide Memorial Methodist Church in San Francisco, will speak July 22 on mobilizing senior power.

A "Community mental health drama session" will be held July 29 by the center staff to share concerns and ideas for better mental health services to the community.

On Aug. 5, mental health worker Michael Adams will talk on "The Pre-draft Dilemma," when advice and suggestions will be offered to draft-age men.

Child psychologist Joan B. Kelly will talk on August 12 on promoting mental health in children.

Another group session, "Mobilizing Personal Potential," will start at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at the center with Dr. George Wilson, Pat Fenson, Jeanine Gisvold, Josephine St. John and Norman Woodbury as staff. The session will meet each Tuesday through August 4, and participants will be introduced to psychodrama, art encounter, and other methods to work on self-development.

On July 16, a session titled "On Being a Woman" will start at 9 a.m. at the center, led by Mrs. Lashbrook and Phyllis Watts. The sessions will explore woman's role in society, family and careers, and will meet each Thursday morning through August 13.

On July 14, the cross-generational group will meet at 8:15 p.m. at the center. Other sessions are set for July 21 and August 4. The center staff will direct the sessions with people of all ages invited to speak on their concerns to people of other generations.

"Family Day" will be an all-day session from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Aug. 14 at the center, with Kaplan and Mrs. Lashbrook leading. Discussion will investigate how each member of a family meets his wants and needs. Families are to bring a picnic lunch to share.

A weekend session for couples, "Learning the Rewards of Genuine Partnership," will be conducted by Kaplan and Mrs. Lashbrook Aug. 15-16, for couples who wish to develop better skill in communicating and reacting to each other.

A "singles workshop" is scheduled from 5 to 11 p.m. Aug. 20 for all single persons over 25. A picnic supper is planned and discussion will center on human relationships.

Regulations On Public Meetings To Be Discussed

A proposal to establish regulations governing public meetings, assemblies and parades in public places will be discussed by the San Rafael City Council at its meeting at 8 p.m. Monday at city hall.

A proposed ordinance requires a permit and sets certain restrictions on public gatherings.

The council will also open bids on the purchase of road materials for the 1970-71 fiscal year and hold a public hearing on a planning commission recommendation that certain property be rezoned from single family residential to planned community district.

Since it has not yet approved a budget for the current fiscal year, the coundil will consider a resolution authorizing payment of any salary increases retroactive to July 1.

Twin Cities Select Citizens Of The Year

Shirley A. Walker was named Corte Madera's citizen of the year and Donald A. Denton was named Larkspur's citizen of the year yesterday as the twin cities opened their annual Fourth of July celebration.

The two were presented plaques by Donald A. Beacock and Gilbert Dubuc, presidents of the Corte Madera and Larkspur chambers of commerce, at last night's family pizza party. They were to ride in the Fourth of July parade today.

Mrs. Walter, mother of six children and a registered nurse, has taken part in the Twin Cities Co-operative Nursery School, is president of the Larkspur-Corte Madera School Parent-Teacher Association, a member of the Corte Madera Park and Recreation Commission, Redwoods Presbyterian Church, the Chapman-Montecito Homeowners Association and the Larkspur-Corte Madera Fourth of July Committee.

Denton, nominated by Larkspur Fire Chief William C. Shurtz, has lived in Larkspur for 40 years, has been an active member of the volunteer firemen since 1937, and is also active in other civic organizations. Shurtz referred to him as the type "who devotes his entire life to the protection of life and property. . .with no compensation for his dedication as a volunteer fireman."

'Son Of God' Starves To Death In Jail Protest

BELLINGHAM, Wash. (UPI)—A Canadian youth who said he was the "son of God" starved himself to death in a jail here as a protest against a 30-day sentence for illegal entry into the United States.

Authorities did not notice the serious condition of Robert L. Guest, 22, London, Ont., until early this week. He was taken to a hospital where he died Friday of malnutrion and dehydration after the 23-day hunger strike.

Guest, who signed a document "the son of God," told a federal marshal upon his arrest June 12 that he "was on a trip when he saw God and was given the message to come to the United States."

The brown thrasher is Georgia's official bird.

One Man Missing In Boat Collision

NEW YORK (UPI)—One man was listed missing when a charter fishing boat with 50 persons aboard partially sank after colliding early today with a freighter in dense fog near the mouth of New York Harbor.

The U.S. Coast Guard reported the 80-foot fishing boat "Tampa III" was "under water but visible" after colliding with the freighter "Morma Glen," owned by the Moore-McCormack Lines of New York, about 3:15 a.m. EDT. All but one of the 50 persons aboard the fishing vessel were rescued, the Coast Guard said.

Finnish Births Drop

HELSINKI (UPI)—Fewer Finns were born in 1969 than at any time since 1934, population experts says. The officials said about 68,000 babies were born last year in Finland, compared with more than 78,000 in 1968. In 1934 the total was just under 68,000.

Belvedere Council To Study Flood Problem

The Belvedere City Council will consider a report on flooding problems on the Tiburon Peninsula when it meets Monday at 8 p.m. at city hall.

Prepared by the Tiburon-Belvedere drainage study committee, the report asks that the city councils of Belvedere and Tiburon review and adopt the immediate and long-range recommendations it contains.

In other business, the council is to consider a salary schedule and operations budget contained in the city's proposed $333,390 spending program for 1970-71 and a citizens' request to establish later hours for rubbish collection.

Two months in the making, the drainage study identifies three drainage basins on the peninsula and recommends ways of alleviating winter flooding in each.

For the Reed basin, which extends from Red Hill north to Richardson Bay, the study asks a program of examining and clearing existing catch basins and drain pipes to increase their efficiency; stabilizing the soil on Red Hill by dressing and planting, and establishing trash racks above Reed School to catch silt.

Long-range plans call for construction of a closed flood [illegible] channel along the east side of Tiburon Boulevard.

Boutique Burgled

Cash, clothing and jewelry of undetermined value was stolen Monday night from the Storm Center Boutique, 2631 Bridgeway, Sausalito, police reported. Marjorie E. Vogt, an employee of the shop, told police entrance was gained by throwing a rock through a large plate glass window.

For the Tiburon basin, from Red Hill to the southeastern end of the peninsula, the report recommends continuing maintenance of existing facilities; flapper gates on outfall lines to prevent the intrusion of tidal water from the bay, and a system of pumps and lines to discharge water to the bay.

Recommendations for the Belvedere basin, which includes the east side of the island, are for a silt trap on Laurel Avenue to protect Belvedere Lagoon; a channel for water from San Rafael Avenue to drain into Richardson Bay instead of into the lagoon, and an eventual closed line along Laurel Avenue.

No cost estimate on recommended improvements was given in the report, but the committee did suggest several methods of financing, including direct ad valorem taxes, an assessment district, a capital improvement bond issue, or a cost-sharing agreement between the cities, landowners and the Reed School District.

Senator Decries Pilferage Cost To U.S. Shippers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Thieves are taking about $850 million worth of goods a year from docks, airport cargo terminals and hijacked trucks.

Sen. Alan Bible, D-Nev., put this estimate on the value of stolen goods after listening to two days of testimony at Senate Small Business Subcommittee hearings.

Bible said the pilferage and hijacking were at critical levels "which harms the businessman while making the public pay crime-inflated prices."

The senator broke down the annual losses this way: $700 million worth of cargo stolen from trucks, $100 million at seaport docks and warehouses and $50 million at airports.

Korean Pastor Will Preach At Mill Valley

Rev. Charles D. Stokes, founder and professor of Taejon Methodist Seminary in Taejon, South Korea, will speak tomorrow at 9:30 a.m. at the Methodist Church of Mill Valley, Camino Alto and Sycamore, according to Pastor George P. Carter.

Rev. Stokes will tell of his work in training men and women for ministry and service in rural Korea. He arrived from Korea Friday for a year's furlough.

In 1967, while on a tour of Korean mission stations for Heifer Project, Inc., Pastor and Mrs. Carter met Rev. and Mrs. Stokes and visited the seminary. Several members of the Mill Valley church have supported the seminary's scholarship fund through donations.

The seminary was founded in 1954 in an abandoned Buddhist temple in the downtown area of the city. More than 500 have been graduated from the seminary and are doing Christian work. Most are pastors, wives of pastors, teachers or engaged in work with orphanages and other social services throughout South Korea. The seminary now has 150 students, including 30 who plan to graduate in the newly established music education department.

Mrs. Stokes, has been a missionary teacher in Korea since 1954. She works with the kindergarten training College, a junior college, at the seminary and with women at the prison in Taejon.

Dr. Stokes, an ordained minister of the United Methodist Church, was born in South Carolina, but was reared in Korea. He returned to the United States where he attended Asburn College and Theological Seminary, receiving degrees in 1936 and 1938. He received his Ph. D. degree from Yale University in 1947. For two years prior to going to Korea he was pastor of churches in North Carolina.

Lutherans Note Fewer Members

NEW YORK (UPI) —Two big Lutheran denominations have reported membership decreases for 1969.

The Lutheran Church in America, largest of North America's Lutheran bodies, reported membership of 3,259,558 as of Dec. 31, 1969, a decline of 21,212 members from the year before.

For the first time since it was organized 10 years ago, the American Lutheran Church reported a decline in baptized membership during 1969 to a total of 2,559,588, compared with 2,576,105 at the end of 1968. Confirmed membership, however, increased 4,381 during 1969 to a total of 1,771,999.

New Service Times

Dr. Ralph J. Fortune, minister of the First Baptist Church of San Anselmo has listed new hours for Sunday Services. Morning worship will be at 9 a.m., Sunday School at 10 a.m. and evening services at 7:30 p.m. The new hours will be effective through August.

Saigon Pastor To Talk At Hamilton Air Base

HAMILTON AIR FORCE BASE — Rev. James Humphries, pastor of Saigon's Trinity Baptist Church, will speak tomorrow at Protestant worship services at 9:30 a.m. in Chapel No. 2 and at 11 a.m. in Chapel No. 1.

Hamilton will be Rev. Humphries' first stop in the United States after four years of missionary service in Vietnam. Mr. Humphries is an accredited newsman for Baptist Press and will speak from first-hand experience on "The Two Wars in Vietnam."

He worked closely with the chaplains at Tan Son Nhut during his stay in Vietnam. Rev. Humphries frequently attended the evening "Country Church" service at the base. Many men also attended the services he held at the Trinity Baptist Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Humphries will be staying at the home of Chaplain L. H. Miller during his stay. He will be speaking throughout the East Bay area. Friends may call at the Miller home.

During the May, 1969, Viet Cong attacks on Saigon, Rev. Humphries was driving to one of the Baptist chapels which had been hit by enemy shells. He hoped to help evacuate the student pastor and others who might be in the building.

But about 100 yards before he reached the chapel, he was caught in crossfire between opposing forces. Humphries jumped out of his car and ran for cover in a nearby building.

"I had often wondered what my reaction would be at such a time," the missionary recalled in a recent sermon. "Now I know! I was scared. Fear was real. Yet there was within me such a calmness and peace of heart that my fears were insignificant."

Witnessing for Christ in such times of peril is difficult, but it is not impossible, Humphries told his congregation at Trinity Baptist Church, Saigon. The church is made up primarily of U. S. servicemen.

Despite sometimes having to brave sniper fire to attend church, the constant danger of a grenade being thrown into their midst, and the inability to hold night services for a year, they were able to record a baptism ratio of one baptism for every five church members.

Rev. Humphries recalled a statement which Baker J. Cauthen, Executive Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, made last fall to a group of 95 missionary appointees undergoing orientation at Ridgecrest, N. C., Baptist Assembly, "You're going deliberately where the storms rage, but you will not be so much aware of the storms as of Jesus Christ. So go ahead and unpack your bags."

In the midst of Vietnam's peril, Rev. Humphries concluded, the missionaries' bags are unpacked — and will not be packed again until "God tells us to go elsewhere."

SUCCESSOR TO ATHENAGORAS?

Illness Stirred Speculation

By JOHN RIGOS

ATHENS (UPI) — The recent recovery to good health of Patriarch Athenagoras and his return to Istanbul as the senior Greek Orthodox prelate has put an end to some agonizing speculation on a possible successor.

The 84-year-old churchman flew to Vienna in April for treatment after medical experts feared he was suffering from cancer. It developed this was not the case, but while he was undergoing treatment there was some hectic behind-the-scenes activity in Athens, Istanbul and New York to put forward cardidates to succeed him.

The Greek Orthodox community of the United States is the largest flock directly administered by the patriarch through an archbishop.

Athenagoras served 18 years as archbishop of the United States, before his election to the ecumenical throne in 1948. His election came at a time when Greece and Turkey were boosting their anti-Communist stances through such American political programs as the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan.

Subsequent political events, however, especially the thorny problem of Cyprus, has made the position of the patriarchate in Istanbul more difficult than at any time in nearly half a century.

In 1922, it was feared the holiest See in Greek Christian orthodoxy, established in Istanbul in 330 A.D. when Constantine the Great moved his government from Rome to Byzantium, would be expelled from the Turkish city. A war between Greece and Turkey forced the Greek population of Asia Minor - about 1.5 million persons - to flee to Greece itself.

Through the treaty of Lausanne in 1923, the patriarchate was spared, and so were the Greek inhabitants of Istanbul together with those of the Greek islands of Imroz and Bozcada, both of which were ceded to Turkey.

This Greek-Turkish congregation has dwindled over the years from a quarter of a million to about 20,000, with reductions especially acute since the anti-Greek riots in Istanbul in 1955 and the Greek-Turkish confrontations over Cyprus from 1964 to 1967.

Many members of the patriarchate hierachy also have been expelled for "anti-Turkish" activities.

The holy synod of the ecumenical patriarchate consists nowadays of 10 metropolitans-that is, residents of Isanbul-with 60-year-old Metropolitan Meliton of Chalkidon the most prominent. He is possible heir to Athenagoras.

Meliton seems to be acceptable to the Turkish government and has the backing of the Greek government.

Turkish support is the key because the government has a veto right over the election of a patriarch.

New York-based Archbishop Iacovos of North and South America, the largest community outside Greece and the most involved in the ecumenical movement, appears to be well qualified to lead the orthodox church one day. But the Turkish government, according to diplomatic sources, is unwilling to accept another Athenagoras-type patriarch.

The Turks were opposed to Athenagoras' overtures towards the Roman Catholic church and very reluctantly permitted the patriarch to travel to Jerusalem and Rome in 1964 for meeting with Pope Paul VI.

Greek officials also are not enthusiastic about another patriarch who takes his ecumenical role as seriously as Athenagoras, which mitigates against Iacovos.

It's a difference in viewpoint that is troubling the church and deeply concerns Patriarch Athenagoras.

Leader Says 2 Million Baptists In Russia

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary says there are more than two million Baptists in the Soviet Union.

Dr. Duke K. McCall said, "It's not wise for religious leaders to advertise publicly the growth in their church membership (in the U.S.S.R) and they know it."

The church claims about 510,000 Baptists in Russia, but McCall said there are many more than that figure.

Success Hasn't Changed Michael Caine

By WAKA TSUNODA
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Caine looks at the menu and rubs his nose with the knuckles of his big, thick hand. "What is saute?" he wants to know.

When success came to this freckled-faced Cockney whose ancestors toiled for more than two centuries in London's Billingsgate fish market, Caine declared: "I've had 35 years of not having any money and I would now like, in all justice, fairness and decency, to have 35 years of absolute luxury—and if I can possibly get it, I will. But if I can't I won't shoot myself. I'll shoot somebody else."

He won't have to shoot anybody. Now, four years later, his career continues to soar. His latest film is "Too Late the Hero," with Cliff Robertson; another film, "A Last Valley," is awaiting release; and he is set to begin another.

THINGS ARE going so well that he has calmed down, somewhat.

"Yes, at one time I was concerned with living a life of luxury. Not now. I have freedom from worry about money. This is good. But I'm not sumptuous; I'm modest in demands. I don't think success has changed me much. When it came, I had set my ways and thoughts. You just grow older and wiser."

His blond hair is slightly long, and he wears an ascot with a suit.

SOMEONE HAS said that he is so concerned with his virility that he wouldn't dare go to the manicurist and he'd probably cut his nails with kitchen scissors. He laughs. His upper lip curls up lopsidedly and his sleepy eyes get sleepier behind the black-rimmed glasses.

"No, I don't quite do that. I don't try to project any image. I stay natural, except trying to be well-mannered. People say, 'Oh, you actors are always acting.' I say, 'I do acting for lots of money. How could you be so conceited as to think I'm acting for you for nothing!'

"I don't do pushups like old time movie stars to develop muscles. I don't even exercise. I'm lazy, you know?

"BUT MAN ought to be man, and women ought to be women. I find this women's liberation movement very strange. It is strange because it is flourishing in the country where women are the freest of any country in the world. It's a contradiction. American women spend more money on pills, psychoanalysis, stimulants and depressants than on food. They ought to leave the psychoanalysts and go back to their husbands and children. It all went too far in America. Do you know how English women won equal pay? By persuading male union leaders and not fighting against them, not being aggressive or belligerent. I'm old fashioned, you know."

MICHAEL CAINE
'I'm old-fashioned'

"You know" is his favorite punctuation.

Then, talking about his career, he says:

"I THINK I will wind up as a director. I want to be a director in order not to be an actor when I'm old.

"There is nothing more sad than growing fat and bald in front of the public and having to go to Switzerland for facelifting. I want to grow old behind the camera. How old is old? Oh, 50 years."

"ONCE A director said to me, 'When you see the girl, really raise your eyebrows. She is so beautiful.' I said, 'Why not cut to the girl and if she's beautiful the audience will raise its eyebrows. Then cut to me and I'll do nothing, but it will look like I'm raising my eyebrows.' "

A waiter brings with reverence a dish of sauteed liver. "Ah, good. That's for me," he says.

He has found out what "saute" means.

New Faces In Virginian

It's a ninth season coming up for NBC's "The Virginian," and there will be some changes in the fall.

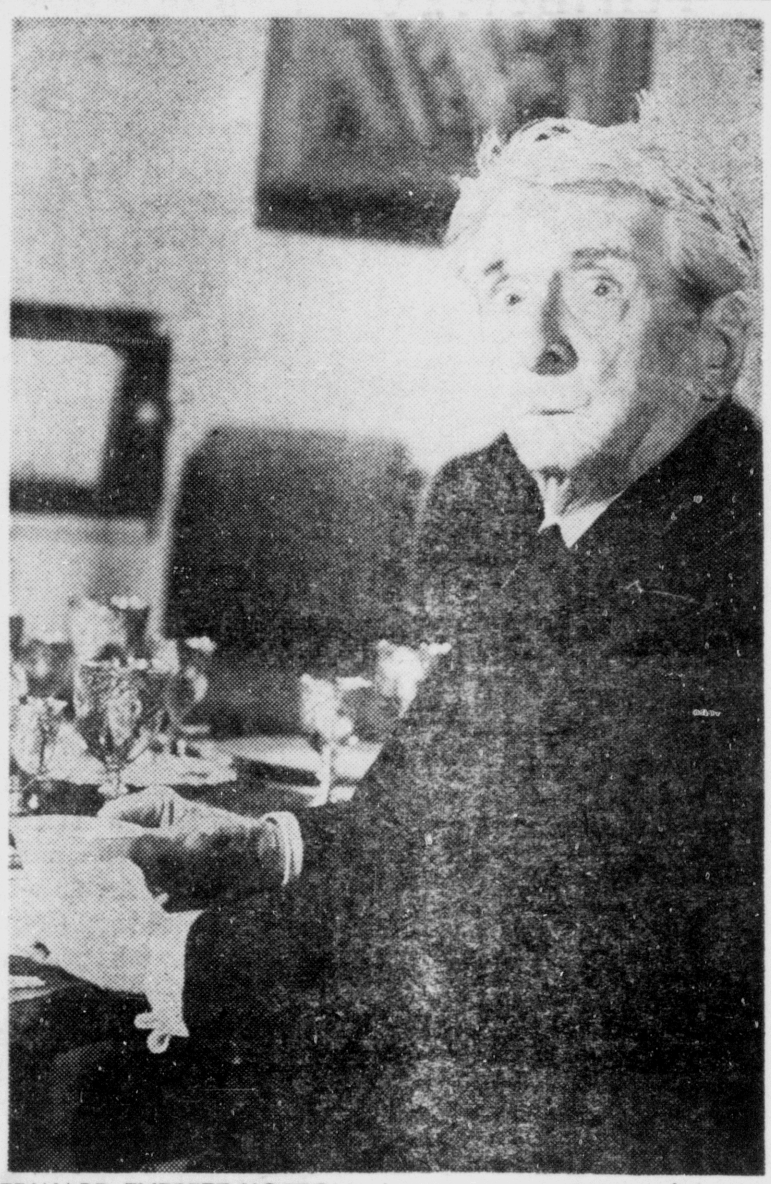
Lee Majors of the late "Big Valley" series becomes a new ranch hand who will alternate with the others as central figure in the episodes. The time element will be advanced about a decade, into the mid-1890s.



EDWARD EVERETT HORTON plays a senior citizen who may have clues to the whereabouts of the missing wealth of a deceased millionaire in "Island of Gold and Precious Stones," an episode on "The Name of the Game" series to be colorcast Friday at 8:30 p.m. on Channels 3 and 4.

Some New Releases By Capitol

By JOHN SUNIER

THE SONS — Capitol SKAO-332:

One of several excellent rock ensembles who are strongly influenced by jazz, the Sons of Champlin were one of the best of the so-called "second generation" of rock groups in the San Francisco area. They changed their name to "The Sons" for this LP, and I understand in the time it's taken me to plough through a big stack of albums to review, the group has changed their name again.

Anyway, the seven longhairs are cooking, whatever they call themselves. One is reminded of Blood Sweat and Tears on such tracks as the opening "Love of a Woman," as well as "Boomp Boomp Chop," with its explosive reeds and swinging electric organ.

GOOSE CREEK SYMPHONY — Capitol ST-444:

This is another new group hailing evidently from Arizona, of all places. Like a number of other recent groups, they are embarrassingly similar to The Band in their blend of rock and country. However, though I can't admire them for originality, I love The Band and therefore dig this LP mucho.

EARL OF RUSTON — The Salvation Co. — Capitol ST-465:

Earl Woods was a country singer from Ruston, La., who died last year. The Salvation Co. has assembled a most touching musical memorial to him that strikes me as one of the best-realized "theme" LPs since Sergeant Pepper. The songs are charming and the nostalgic feeling truly affecting.

OUTTA SEASON — Ike and Tina Turner — Blue Thumb BTS5:

The dynamic duo, Ike and Tina, have appeared in this area frequently lately and they are terrific in person, I understand. This LP's cover, with the pair in whiteface eating watermelons, is striking, to say the least. The tunes are real rockers delivered in their high voltage but always musical style. "Dust My Broom" was my favorite.

THE ORIGINAL DELANEY & BONNIE — Elektra EKS 74039:

Delaney & Bonnie are a really enjoyable pair in the white-singers-who-sound-black bag, with a bit of country and gospel thrown in for good measure. They are featured against a sizeable backing group and even small chorus.

TRUCKIN' WITH ALBERT COLLINS — Blue Thumb BTS8:

The album title pretty well says it — the contemporary blues idiom is Collins' bag and he does it in his own way, without imitating the "kings" of the guitar. The concentration is on instrumentals in this collection and most of them groove like mad. Though re-channeled for stereo, the sound is fine.

EDWIN HAWKINS AND THE HEBREW BOYS — Buddah BDS 5047:

The leader of the famed Edwin Hawkins Singers ("Oh Happy Day") has taken some talented young men from his larger group and formed this gospel vocal group. Using contemporary rhythms and harmonies, they deliver God's message with zest and joy. While the LP lacks the thrilling "spread" of all the young voices in the large choir, it still deserves listening and appreciation.

MORRISON HOTEL — The Doors — Elektra EKS-75007:

The latest Doors LP features more of Jim Morrison's readily-identifiable lyrics and vocals. Among the high spots are "Roadhouse Blues," which adds some other musicians including even a harpist and "Waiting for the Sun," a good Morrison tune. However, a certain sameness pervades the LP.

Perhaps the Doors are also being victimized by the push to turn out records even if there's not enough really great material to do so on such a frequent basis.

THE PRESIDENT

In a position of power,
At the crossroads
Of history,
Weighing statistic
And probability;
All the hope
Of this world
Upon his shoulders,
So he feels
Like Atlas,
But lesser than a God,
Like the Sequoia, Sempervirent,
Waiting and acting
Upon the internal,
Seeking rings of time,
Influencing space,
And energy of nature
Around his sphere,
External branches,
Roots in ground,
Holding firm the soil
Of the nation;
Fires burn,
And have not destroyed
The serendipity
Of which we sprang,
Parts and purpose,
Whorls of creation;
Feel for him,
This power borders
Upon despair,
It is most human
To error, in
Directions which we take.

POINT REYES STATION — C. B. GEARHART

WHAT SEEK YOU FROM LIFE

What share have we in a tomorrow
From what source is there to borrow
An endless parade of days?

From what source is man's fate knit
That he would, in councils, sit
And plan tomorrow's ways?

Man's choice is not his to make
His choice is but to take
His brief unknown tomorrow.

Spend not your life in sorrows deep
Nor your joys perpetual keep
There are but four seasons in a man.

Know not man how short his span
Let man to know, as well he can
The unforgivingness of time.

CORTE MADERA — F. ILIFF SCHOFIELD

ADVICE TO BRIDES

Man can not live by bread alone:
Give him daphne for his soul!
When he asks, give not a stone,
Man can not live by bread alone.
Then how about an ice-cream cone?
Or breakfast on a sunrise knoll?
Man can not live by bread alone:
Give him daphne for his soul!

The Noisiest Day Of The Year

When Exploding Fireworks, Burnt Fingers Marked Fourth

By JACK FALLON

If you feel you are on the borderline, here's a one-question test to determine to which side of the generation gap you belong:

What is a Spit Devil?

If you hazard the guess that it is one of the many exotically named rock music groups, you belong on the youthful side of the age abyss.

But if you reply without hesitation that the Spit Devil is — or was — one piece in the fireworks arsenal with which Americans formerly celebrated their Independence Day, then you are starting to get a bit long in the tooth.

ALL OF WHICH is likely to cause older generation Marinites to shake their heads at the ignorance or innocence of the younger generations that have grown up in the county since fireworks were banned, and to begin recalling what Fourth of July celebrations were like "when I was a boy."

And their juniors, in turn, will shake their heads and say: "There he goes again."

Better though that they show a bit more tolerance of their elders. After all, memories and nostalgia are just about the only values left to us gray hairs that have survived the wear of time and the effects of inflation.

SO — WHEN I was a boy, the Fourth of July was like this:

It was preceded always by a three or four-day intra-family war of nerves marking the period between the purchase of the fireworks and the arrival of the holiday.

Daily, hourly, more frequently, parents were b a d g e r e d: "Mom, (or dad), can't I shoot off some of those Chinese crackers?"

The inevitable reply: "No. I told you that you would have to wait until the Fourth."

"Not even one?"

"No, not even one."

"Then how about a sparkler?"

"No, not even a sparkler. Now you get out of here and quit pestering me."

SO THE DAYS and hours dragged by, and finally the big morning arrived. It was no morning for sleeping. At dawn, the barrage began. And we three boys were always among the earliest participants.

By breakfast time, we had made heavy inroads into our supply of firecrackers, which was considerable. Our weekly allowances through the year were never more than modest. But twice a year, whether on the rosy 1920s or bleak 1930s side of the depression, at Christmas and at Fourth of July time, dad always found the money for a better than proper celebration. Not just dimes and quarters, but whole dollar bills had been expended upon an assortment of pyrotechnics — for striped or fire truck red three-inch salutes, for the medium-sized Chinese 'crackers, for the packets of tiny Lady Fingers, for the Torpedos you threw, and for the Spit Devils you ground beneath your shoes.

Held in reserve for night-time were the skyrockets, the Roman candles, the bombs, the pinwheels and all the other display pieces.

A F T E R BREAKFAST and after lunch (more often referred to as dinner in those days), the bombardment continued. Little girls winced and held their ears. Dogs howled mournfully. Mothers bound burnt fingers with bandages. And the air grew acrid with the smoke and smell of burning gunpowder.

There was the inevitable contest to see who could blow a tin can the highest by placing one of the big salutes beneath it, then touching it off.

And there was the just as inevitable occurrence, u s u a l l y about mid-afternoon, when three small brothers realized suddenly that they had used up all their firecrackers and punk.

A consultation with dad would follow. Mother would inquire, although already knowing the answer: "Joe, you aren't going to buy them any more firecrackers, are you?" And he would reply: "Well, maybe just a few more, Alice. You know the Fourth of July comes but once a year." And she would add: "Thank goodness."

And up town we would go to find a fireworks stand still open. And the "few more" usually turned out to be as many packages as the dealer's depleted stocks could supply. Then back home and a resumption of the bedlam.

THERE WAS, of course, other Fourth of July family traditions besides the firecrackers.

Annually, dad would buy a case of soda pop which would be kept on ice in a tub on the back porch. And whereas such treats were strictly rationed during the year, the only limits on the Fourth were the appetites and capacities of small boys. There would be grape (always a favorite and quick to go), strawberry, lime, cherry, orange and all the other flavors, including root beer, usually one bottle of watery chocolate, and something called cream soda that was not too popular.

There was brick ice cream, too, which we wrongfully considered superior to the home-churned product of the freezers upon which less fortunate neighbors relied. The drug store's supplies ran almost exclusively to vanilla, chocolate and strawberry, but once in awhile there was black walnut as well. And that was an occasion for celebration in itself.

The staple food for the Fourth — and for most other holiday and special occasions — was fried chicken, although community celebrations usually featured barbecued beeves.

Sometimes the main meal of the day was a picnic — eaten in the countryside, not the backyard. And if so, then the chicken would be accompanied by some of mother's wonderful potato salad and baked beans and no doubt a home-baked cake, all washed down with the soda pop. Of course, for dad and any uncles who might be along, a few b o t t l e s of beer would float among the soft drinks. And before repeal marked the demise of really good beer, it would be his potent homebrew that dad bragged was "the best on the block."

If the meal were eaten in the home, then corn on the cob was a traditional accompaniment for the c h i c k e n. And whether eaten indoors or outdoors, there simply had to be iced watermelon or it wasn't the Fourth of July.

VERY MUCH A part of the Fourth of July observance, too, was the 48-star American Flag that dad hung carefully right after his breakfast from the front porch — in those days there were simply front porches and back porches, not entrances and patios — and which he took down immediately after the evening meal.

For the most part we provided our own entertainment, although there are recollections of ball games, band concerts and rodeos during the day. The era of the big Fourth of July parades in our community was largely past. Politicians, even as now, were still ready and eager to deliver their patriotic and windy orations, but few had the inclination to listen to them. Only the reassuring voice of FDR had any meaning for the working man, and his words came to us over the radio where he dealt with hard facts like unemployment and sagging farm prices, not the traditional but hollow-sounding Fourth of July histrionics.

Sometimes there were public fireworks displays in nearby communities, and we w o u l d drive out into the country, park a few miles away, and enjoy the sky show from afar.

BUT THE REAL high point of the day was the Fallon family fireworks display from our own front yard. This usually began shortly after 9 o'clock.

Dad did the firing of the pieces (somehow, during the day he had managed to wander out into the yard "just to see if the boys are behaving" often enough to shoot off a goodly share of the firecrackers as well.) The family, usually joined by r e l a t i v e s and by neighbors who enjoyed pyrotechnical displays but were too smart to spend their own hard-earned money on such momentary p l e a s u r e, watched from the porch. Occasionally an older son was permitted to leave its safety to touch off a pinwheel, a duty he performed with great pride.

All along the block, other families had gathered on their front porches to watch "those crazy Fallons" blow up their money into fire and smoke, some because they liked the show, and others because they wanted to make sure an errant skyrocket didn't land on top of their roof and set the shingles afire.

ROMAN C A N D L E S huffed and puffed their c o l o r f u l belches, skyrockets screamed and left their fiery paths, pinwheels whirled madly, bombs burst resoundingly. And each year dad lamented that "they didn't have any of those really big skyrockets like they used to make."

The biggest rocket was always saved for last, to mark a climax to the show. After which, the smaller kids brought out their sparklers and had the stage to themselves for awhile.

Sparklers gone and a few children whimpering with singed fingers, the boys then brought the festivities to their close by shooting off the last of their supply of firecrackers. The street rang with the reports of the big salutes. Until finally the last cracker exploded and there was silence. And the older neighbors could shake their heads in relief and retire for the night, knowing that the mad Fallons had f i n a l l y brought their annual day-long binge of noise and color to a close.

MOTHER WAS fixing a before-bed snack of cake and ice cream for one and all. Dad was having second thoughts about all the money he had blown on now vanished 'crackers and other fireworks and vowing he would not go overboard the next year (but he would). The kids were r e c a l l i n g eagerly the events of the day, and regretting it would be a full 12 months before another Fourth of July rolled around. And Muggs the dog, who had spent a good part of the last 18 hours under the porch, would begin to show s o m e of his old self-assuredness!

Well, maybe. At least it seems that way in retrospect.

But one forgets all the burns and the near mishaps to the eyes. And the time one of our Roman candles set the Wilson house across the street afire and began a nasty neighborhood

FIREWORKS including t h e b i g g e s t skyrockets that c o u l d be found, touched off by father in the front-yard, climaxed the Fourth of July celebration of the late 1920s and 1930s, as remembered by one Marinite from his boyhood years. feud that lasted for years. And the lady down the street who lost her grandson one Fourth when the lad died in the California town in which he lived when some imbecile threw a cannon cracker into the fireworks stand where he was working and turned it into a death trap. Or the many made miserable by the din. Or the money that went up in smoke at a time when many households were hard-pressed for food and rent.

MORE PATRIOTIC then? Well, we did fly the Flag every year. But remembered, it now seems more like ritual than like a calculated tribute to Old Glory and Uncle Sam. Come to think of it, we rarely connected the holiday with its original purpose — a salute to the founding of our country. In fact I can't remember that it was ever referred to as Independence Day. It was always the Fourth of July, simply a special occasion for the making of noise, a commodity which we have in more than ample supply 365 days of the year now.

Perhaps, then, the best Independence Day observance would be one spent in relatively quiet contemplation of our country's history and of its present and future role in the affairs of mankind.

But then, how many of us are devoting this day, devoid though it is of many of the distractions of the 1920s and 1930s, to that kind of thing?

A Sound Of The Pipes Heard In Marin

By GIL PEARSON

"Oh, ye'll tak the high road an' I'll tak the low road, An' I'll be in Scotland before ye; But I and my true love will never meet again, On the bonnie, bonnie banks of Loch Lomond."

These classic lines serve well to indicate the trend of interest for some 50 Marin-based youngsters who make up the Prince Charles Bagpipe Band — a successful group dedicated with singular tenacity to presenting authentic Highland dress, dance and music.

Over the past two years these well-trained and inspired young people have been invited to appear at many public functions.

We went to Corte Madera to get the story behind the Prince Charles Bagpipe Band.

THE TEEN-AGE Club was alive with sound as we parked our car and unloaded camera, lights and notebooks. Pipers and drummers were tuning up their instruments with zest and enthusiasm. We shot pictures.

Around a back room conference table we interviewed two of the prime movers of the Bay Area's fastest rising piping and drumming group.

Jack Sutherland of Corte Madera instructs the bass and tenor drum section and drills the bank in marching disciplines. He is otherwise engaged as scoutmaster for Troop 24 (many of his Scouts play with the band), as a park and recreation commissioner, a life member of the St. Andrews Society, and as an executive manager for A.B. Dick Co. of San Francisco.

Bill Merriman of Strawberry is the bagpipe instructor. He is a member of the Caledonian Society, and his occupation is that of a federal court reporter.

WE ASKED FOR background material and Jack and Bill responded that the Prince Charles Bagpipe Band is a non-sponsored, non-profit, tax-exempt unit for the benefit of young boys and girls.

"Jack and I with Gerry Golanty organized the band in the fall of 1967," added Bill Merriman. "We started with 14 members without uniforms and equipment. Today membership is 50-plus, and we are completely equipped with pipes, drums and kilts.

"The ages of pipers and drummers run from 7 to young adults in their early 20s. The band is really divided into three groups. Our seniors are designated as a Class A bagpipe band by the Pacific Coast Pipe Band Association for grading purposes at Scottish competitions and gatherings.

"Every senior works as an instructor with the younger members.

"OUR BAND IS self-supporting," Bill continued, "from prize winnings in parades and contests, and also from earnings for appearances at concerts, banquets and shopping center promotions, and from one or two pipers performing at weddings.

"A recent addition to the band, as player and instructor, is Willy McEarlen who once resided in Glasgow, Scotland. He is recognized as one of the top side drummers in the world."

We pressed Merriman to explain bagpipe music. He replied that it is played from a written score at various tempos such as four-four, two-four, six-eight, etc.

AND HE ADDED, "The beginner learns finger dexterity on the practice chanter which features a double reed. After six to nine months learning exercises and simple tunes, the average student progresses to the bagpipes.

"Bagpipes consist of a leather bag kept filled with air and held under the left arm. Attached to the bag are a blow stick, a chanter on which the melody is played over a nine-note scale, and three drones (two tenors and one bass) which produce a constant chord effect."

ULTIMATE GOAL OF the Prince Charles Bagpipe Band is to make a trip to Scotland and participate in the international contests at the Highland Games.

"But this effort is at least two years into the future," Jack Sutherland noted. "Meanwhile, our band will build up savings for that venture by continuing to accept donations for services

PRACTICE PADS are used by candidates for drummers with the Prince Charles Bagpipe Band. It will take from six months to a year of instruction and practice to attain drumming proficiency.

THEIR REWARD for long hours of work upon the practice pads comes when the students progress to performing on actual drums, and are outfitted with their kilts and other Highland paraphernalia.

TO DEVELOP the necessary finger dexterity and to learn the tunes, the young bagpipers rehearse with practice chanters from which the sound is muted. (Photos by Kit Warne)

Marin Pipe Band Is Parade Favorite

Group Adds A Colorful Touch To Festivities In Bay Area

rendered at public and private affairs.

"Over the past two years we have more than met expenses in this way with appearances at such diversified affairs as the Northgate Shopping Center, Marin Shakespeare Festival, weddings, garden parties, St. Andrews Men's Club, Point Reyes 4-H fair, banquets and all kinds of outdoor gatherings."

JACK SUTHERLAND is the contact for any organization or event wanting colorful Scottish rigs and bagpipes. This summer these pipers will perform in Los Angeles, Portland, Chicago and Coeur d'Alene in Idaho.

"A student-orientated project we are developing," Jack added, "is to offer school districts a Saturday morning program for fourth, fifth and sixth graders. This two-hour presentation will include demonstrations of piping, drumming and dancing in native costumes.

"Included will be a teaching aid package which is to contain pictures, a glossary of terms, the background of the kilt and a history of the bagpipe through the ages to Babylon.

"And, the band will present the students with the Retreat Ceremony which originated during the Napoleonic Wars."

THE BAGPIPE IS an instrument of ancient origin. Statuettes depicting bagpipe playing have been found in Egyptian tombs. It was long known in India and possibly was introduced to the West in the First Century by Nero.

Some form of bagpipe was later used in nearly every European country; it was particularly fashionable in 18th century France, where it was called the musette. Its widest use and greatest development was in the British Isles, particularly Northumberland, Ireland and in the Highlands, Scotland.

The highlands include the counties of Sutherland, Ross and Dumbarton among others. Jack Sutherland is a seventh generation Scot-Canadian who has been a Marinite for the past 12 years.

"JACK," WE QUERIED, "is anything worn under kilts?"

"Members of the most distinguished Scottish regiments have always frowned upon those of their kilt-clad countrymen who do wear something underneath against the day they be struck by a streetcar."

There's No Folk Dancing Generation Gap

Young Marinites Join Their Elders In The Learning And The Fun

There's a tendency to think of folk dancing as the hobby of the middle-aged.

But attendance at any of the several activities at next weekend's Marin Folk Dance Federation's 25th annual Folk Dance Festival will demonstrate the falsity of that belief.

While the Friday, Saturday and Sunday event will pay special tribute to 25-year participants in the festival, beginning with the initial festival of July 14, 1946, under Sausalito Folk Dancers sponsorship and Wilma Young's direction, there will be more teen-age faces among the dancers than ever before.

FOR INSTANCE, among the exhibition dancers will be these two Marin groups:

Skip Clippinger's Troikans, composed of youngsters 10 and older, who will perform the intricate polynesian Vahine Paumoto stick dance.

And the Kopachka Dancers, led by Dean and Nancy Linscott, who will do a Norwegian weaving dance with singing. The Kopachkas include a goodly number of teen-agers along with older dancers.

SPEAKING OF folk dancing, the veteran instructor of the Marin Whirlaways Joe Angeli says: "There just isn't any generation gap."

He continues: "These many youngsters who come to our classes attend because they want to be there. No one made them come. They want to learn. And often they ask to dance with adult partners because they can learn faster and better from experienced dancers."

The adults, he adds, accept the young people into their clubs because of their sincerity, and "because, frankly, they add a bit of zest and energy to the proceedings with their eagerness to learn."

ACCEPTED ON an equal footing, the younger members bear their fair share of special duties such as the party night preparations as well.

Nor is there any disciplinary problem.

Says Dean Linscott of the younger Kopachkas: "There's too much work and too much fun for any of that."

If there are potential trouble-makers, he adds, they just don't come back. "It is not the kind of thing for which they are looking."

MRS. LINSCOTT has a special class for very young children. And sometimes the little ones can let their enthusiasm or impatience get the better of them. But the rule for the class is: "Kids with parents only." And with the parent present, there's no discipline problem.

There's a youth class that meets with Linscott and Fred Sweger on Wednesday evenings at the Mill Valley Recreation Center. It started as a beginners' class, but can no longer be described as such. The young dancers now know some 35 dances.

They will continue to meet through the summer, dividing their time about 60 per cent line dances, 40 per cent partner dances.

GENERALLY SPEAKING, for the teen-age and preteen-age dancers, the livelier the dance, the more the enjoyment.

Older dancers confess that they sometimes have to pause and rest awhile, admiring, or envying, the seemingly endless supply of energy of their younger colleagues.

But, the teen-agers rejoin, there are dancers 50 and older "who can keep up with us all evening, and show us a step or two."

THIS CLOSE-UP shows the detail of the embroidery work which young girls put into their folk dancing costumes. While the designs are their own, the girls are careful to respect the ethnic traditions of the nationality they will represent.

Marin Folk Dance Federation officers hope there will be no generation gap among the spectators at their festival next weekend, even as there will be none among the dancers.

THE PUBLIC is invited especially to enjoy the dancing on the green Sunday, July 12, at the College of Marin Athletic Field in Kentfield, starting at 1:30 p.m.

That evening, beginning at 7:30, there will be exhibition dancing in the college gymnasium.

There is no admission charge.

On the program will be eight dances that were also performed at the first Marin festival 25 years ago — attesting to the continued popularity of favored routines.

BUT TIME brings changes as well. Whereas there was only one line dance performed at the first festival, there will be nine this year.

FIVE GIRLS from the Troikan dance group practice the Polynesian stick dance they will perform July 12 on the College of Marin campus in Kentfield as one of the highlights of the annual folk dancing festival. Sleuths & Suspense

THE SUMMIT by Stephen Marlowe; Geis, 336 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.

The time is the not-too-distant future, and the place Switzerland. There is scheduled to take place a meeting of an American President (perhaps Nixon's successor) and a Soviet Union premier.

Predictably, it is a time of crisis. This time the point of tension is Yugoslavia. Is Russia planning an invasion in order to keep its wayward former ally in the Communist orbit? Even at the risk of nuclear holocaust?

In Switzerland men, including Matthew Olds, special assistant to the President, strive desperately to save the peace. In Moscow, a Stalin-like party boss is determined upon conquest. The chess game begins, and Nicolai Ivanovich Andreyev, slated for a pawn's role, becomes something much less passive.

Marlowe, a veteran writer of suspense novels, has concocted an interesting yarn with plenty of action and a good Swiss background. Some of his characters ring true, others are thin. But the book's real weakness is in the superficiality of the plot which under close inspection proves to be cliche-infested, a throwback to the unlamented days of the Cold War's deepest freeze.

The book winds up an acceptable bit of escapism, but out of step and not to be confused in any way with international political realities.

A SEASON OF EVIL by Susan Morrow; Doubleday, 186 pages, $4.50. Reviewed by Donald G. Davis.

The U.S. wants to know and rather than have seasoned hands poking about, intelligence wants to send someone who has legitimate business on the island. Someone, too, who can snoop without being watched.

So Midge Thornton, marionette maker and performer, is sent to investigate. Her entry is a fabulous doll collection which she carefully examines as the people around her do strange things. Tension builds. And then there is murder. And very shortly after Midge finds she's ticketed as the next victim.

This is an excellent suspense selection by the Crime Club.

When The Body Is The Message

By DON KEOWN

That man's mouth doesn't always speak the truth is an accepted fact with society. But a relatively new science, called kinesics, holds that there is a non-verbal form of communication that, properly interpreted, will correct or amplify vocal expression.

Author Julius Fast deals with it in his book "Body Language," of which Publisher's Weekly has observed:

"Here 'the body is the message' and Fast's book is literally a book of 'body reading'."

Fast admits that kinesics is still a developing science with many uncertainties. But it is not, he insists, a parlor game, but instead a field that can add new dimension to man's awareness of himself and his understanding of his fellow beings.

Fast explores the body signals — both reflexive and non-reflexive — by which we communicate feelings sometimes completely at odds with our spoken words or the masks we don for society. Especially interesting is the attention he accords to man's need for space and to his reactions when others intrude upon that "territory." As crowding on our planet increases, such studies will grow in pertinence.

Crossed legs, eye winks, raised eyebrows, an erect or slumping posture, arm motions, pursed lips, a touch upon the shoulders — all these can have meaning. But the interpretation must be made within the context of the individual's total behavior pattern.

"Body language and spoken language are dependent on each other. Spoken language alone will not give us the full meaning of what a person is saying, nor for that matter will body language alone give us the full meaning. If we listen only to the words when someone is talking, we may get as much of a distortion as we would if we listened only to the body language."

Not only is kinesics destined to play an increasingly important part in psychiatrist-patient relationships, but, Fast believes, it also could become a vital tool for other sciences.

However, despite Fast's disclaimer that his book is not intended to popularize kinesics at a parlor game level, its publishers state flatly they expect "Body Language" to appeal most strongly to the same people who read "Games People Play." And that best-seller has been used, very often, in just such a loose fashion.

"PLEASE TOUCH" by Jane Howard is closely related in subject matter to Fast's book, being her account of her personal investigation of and involvement with the human potential movement whose sensitivity training and encounter group workshops are mushrooming around the country.

BODY LANGUAGE by Julius Fast; Evans, 192 pages, $4.95.

Sometimes these sessions are intensely verbal with the participants talking almost endlessly about their most private problems and their reactions to those of others. But at other times they are purposely conducted without verbalization. Communication is through the same body language or kinesics discussed by Fast. And the thinking — or feeling, as the movement prefers — is that body expressions will come through honestly and revealingly even when the voice cannot break through old patterns and inhibitions.

Miss Howard, a Life magazine staff writer, attended and participated actively in human potential gatherings in all sections of the country, starting at the fountainhead of the movement, the Esalen Institute headquartered at Big Sur. Some were far-out, others relatively staid. She describes what occurred at all of them quite candidly, giving the non-participant his first clear picture of what an encounter session is really like and demolishing a number of old misconceptions. Some of these meetings sound impressive, others outright silly.

At their best, she says, these group seminars can produce results such as this:

"As I packed my clothes . . . I tried to summarize what I had learned: No lessons that other people, in and out of the movement, hadn't been trying to teach me for years: that I could love strangers and they me, that anger can be converted into strength and force, that tears can melt anguish, and that staying put can be more rewarding than keeping in motion.

"Banal truths, really, but this time they hit home, because these eight days I had trusted the people in charge and yielded to them. They were gentle and wise as well as messianic . . . . They admitted their own limits, gave of themselves incessantly, and perceived in me and in us all something more than we knew was there . . . . "

But in the end, Miss Howard is willing to give the overall movement only limited, qualified approval.

Her book, lively, articulate, written with genuine enthusiasm and the product of much personal probing, both within herself and without, rates an unqualified approval as a curiosity-satisfaction.

REISSUED as 75-cent paperbacks by Pocket Books are six of the splendid Bertha Cool-Donald Lam detective yarns by A.A. Fair (Erle Stanley Gardner). The titles are "Cut Thin to Win," "Up For Grabs," "Fish or Cut Bait," "Try Anything Once," "Shills Can't Cash Chips" and "You Can Die Laughing."

Bobby Seale, ungagged, has a lot to say and he says it well in his story of the Black Panther Party. And, in his terms, he isn't jiving.

Seale, chairman of the party, puts it down in straight language, which achieves what he intended: straightening out misconceptions about the party and providing insight into its workings.

He makes it clear that Black Panthers and Black Nationalists aren't working hand in hand and puts down the "cultural nationalists" who sit around and "bull" while the Panthers are practicing revolutionaries.

The name of the organization itself gives an insight into the thinking of Huey Newton, founder and saint to his followers.

According to Seale, people would ask: "Why do you want to be a vicious animal like a panther?"

Newton, on such occasions, would reply: "The nature of the panther is that he never attacks. But if anyone attacks him or backs him into a corner, the panther comes up to wipe that aggressor or that attacker out, absolutely, resolutely, wholly, thoroughly, and completely."

This might not appease those who view the Black Panthers as a gang of thugs who roam the streets itching to do battle with police, but it is not the Panthers' view of their role, and Seale tells of incident after incident of pure defense on their part.

Of interest to Marin residents, is a passage about Sidney K. Walton, recently fired principal at Martin Luther King School and center of controversy in the Sausalito School District.

Telling of the opening of the first Black Panther office in Oakland, Seale said: "Sid Walton came down and gave us 20, 25 chairs, but he never panned out to be much of anything close to the Party. He was too engrossed in a lot of abstract bull, although he did a lot of work at Merritt College in terms of furthering the things that Huey had already instituted there."

If anyone had the idea that the Black Panthers is a racist organization, Seale wiped out that impression in several passages and points out ". . .you're not going to end racism by perpetuating more racism."

To the charge that the Black Panthers intend to "shoot up" white communities he replies that it is the aim of the Panthers "to defend ourselves against those who already occupy our community, those pigs, and others who come down and shoot us up. We're going to defend our community because we want the power to determine our own destiny in our own black community."

Seale's book covers the key events in the party's history, including the Huey Newton trial, his experiences at the Chicago Eight trial, police raids on Panther headquarters, Eldridge Cleaver's role, as well as projects such as the school breakfast program.

BOBBY SEALE
A lot to say, and he says it well

He reveals that the Black Panther coloring book, which drew criticism for showing a Panther shooting a cop, was rejected by party leaders and distributed against the orders of the Central Committee.

Large and small, the events are all there, but most important are the ideas.

Some Relics Of Americana In The Nation's Heartlands

But in this book, Richard Sanders Allen, the acknowledged world's foremost authority on the subject, reminds us that thousands of these bridges were built in the Midwest — 2,000 in Ohio alone — and that something like 400 still exist.

This entertaining and informative book, rich in illustrations, takes you on a leisurely state-by-state trek through the region to inspect both bridges that are still standing and bridges that are now gone.

Generally speaking, the Midwestern bridges prove somewhat less picturesque than their New England counterparts. But they are nonetheless a part of American transportation and social histories. And there are roofed spans that compare favorably with the most pleasing and most interesting to be found in any region.

Students of Americana cannot always explain the special fascination the subject of covered bridges holds for them. But it is very much there. And in "Covered Bridges of the Middle West" it is given an enthusiastic yet authentic treatment.

A Lady's Lucid Account Of A Highly Complicated War

A WORLD IN FLAMES by Martha Byrd Hoyle; Atheneum, 323 pages, $10. Reviewed by Bryce W. Anderson.

"A World in Flames" is a history of World War II, devoted to the war itself rather than to the many politcal ramifications which accompanied it.

After a hackneyed and unpromising beginning, it develops as a well-done, well-organized account of a war that is exceedingly complex to record. Author Martha Byrd Hoyle follows each campaign to a logical stopping point before picking up another, making the progress of the war easy to follow and eliminating confusion.

Some campaigns get short shrift while others are covered in considerable detail. There is, for instance, only a very sketchy account of the fighting in China and Burma, and no mention at all of the guerrilla resistance in Thailand and Indochina. Also, the role of the Americans is emphasized while those of the British Empire and Free French troops get little attention. However, to cover World War II in one volume necessitates slighting some aspects, and on the whole "A World in Flames" is about as comprehensive and readable a history as its space limitations permit.

It is certainly a more lucid account than many World War II histories which have been produced by more noted scholars.

"Why Can't I Get Carbon Tetrachloride For Home Cleaning?" Mrs. S.B.S.

The Fabric Doctor has warned against the use of "carbon tet" for cleaning at home. Now the U.S. Food & Drug Administration bans it for household use. That's the law and the reason you won't find it available, legally, to you.

We have pointed out repeatedly that carbon tetrachloride is dangerous for home use. Some have accused us of saying that merely to encourage professional drycleaning. Now the Food & Drug Administration terms the chemical as so extremely hazardous that it is impossible to write cautionary labeling sufficient to protect the public. The fluid, which can cause damage to the liver, lungs, heart and kidneys is now banned from any product designed for home use. The FDA's only purpose is to protect you, Mrs. S.B.S. and other consumers.

Trodding The Freedom Trail In Old Boston

The Travel Pages

While no red-blooded Bostonian has forgotten the redcoats, there's a new cry: "The tourists are coming!"

What they come to see in Boston, mainly, is Freedom Trail, which runs from Boston Common to Old North Church.

Between the two points they step off at the Old South Meeting House, the intersection of the Boston Massacre, Faneuil Hall, Paul Revere's cottage, the Bunker Hill Monument, Old Ironsides and other historic points.

Granary Burial Ground holds the remains of Paul Revere, John Hancock, Samuel Adams, Peter Faneuil, the parents of Benjamin Franklin and those victims of the Boston Massacre. Mother Goose is believed buried beneath the stone marked "Mary Goose."

THE NEARBY Boston Common was a hippie hangout until recently. Bostonians once used it to string up witches.

Later its pastures were used for grazing. Benjamin Franklin took his cow to the Commons. The pastures were greener than Franklin's, and the grass was free.

You may, if you wish, still graze your cow there, although no one does. First, the poor animal would get itself killed in traffic. Second, the Common is filled with humans who are napping, not grazing.

BEYOND THE Common, the Boston Globe has restored the Old Corner Bookstore, where Longfellow, Emerson, Holmes, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Whittier and Julia Ward Howe gathered.

When the Globe moved in, a pizza parlor moved out —along with a "Pants Pressed While U Wait" business that had flourished upstairs.

While Boston has dished up history for the tourists, the town is serving up for itself a Little Manhattan. Planted in the 160-million-dollar Prudential Center, for instance, are a 52-story skyscraper, the 29-story Boston-Sheraton and a 12-million-dollar war memorial auditorium.

RISING ON the horizon is the new 75-million-dollar John Hancock Center whose main attraction will be a 60-story tower — tallest skyscraper in all New England.

There is also a new 100-million-dollar Government Center, and a 12-million-dollar Christian Science development under way.

Improvements are being made all the time, too, at close-in Logan International Airport.

The guides tell how the school was named for John Harvard, a Puritan man of the cloth who left his estate and books to Harvard. His books, along with eight million others, are stored in the world's biggest university library.

IT BEARS the name of Harry Widener, an alumnus who took off from school for an ocean voyage. He chose the wrong ship and went down with the Titanic.

Radcliffe, the women's campus, is up the block.

Ivy hangs heavy from the walls of Harvard. Its paths and quads are shadowed by leafy elms and maples in springtime and summer.

WHEN CLASSES are out, the Harvard crowd gathers at Harvard Square. There are more than a dozen bookstores and an Irish pub called Barney's.

At Barney's you may order cheese and onion pie, Irish coffee and corned beef and cabbage. Ladies in Empress gowns and gentlemen in tuxedos stand at the bar after the theater. They drink beer and spoon cabbage in the midst of the hippies.

BACK IN Boston, tourists crowd the Olde Union Oyster House, Jimmy's Harborside, Anthony's Pier 4 and Durgin-Park. The Union Oyster House has been in business for more than 140 years.

Louis Philippe, who became kind of France, hid out upstairs during his exile, and Isaiah Thomas published his Massachusetts Spy there until the Revolutionary War. Now, though, it's famed for its oysters.

Durgin-Park, which isn't a park at all but a restaurant, does business around the corner in a building so old it's held together by termites.

THE OWNER claims that during 135 years it has seen only three changes of chefs. It is Boston's most unelegant restaurant — famed for its huge helpings of roast beef and Boston baked beans, New England boiled dinners, chowder, apple pan dowdy and hot cornbread.

In winter-time, bear steaks appear on the menu along with venison pie and raccoon.

BEHIND THE STATUE with which Bostonians have paid tribute to one of their most famous sons, Paul Revere, can be seen the spire of Old North Church that played such a prominent role in the United States' beginnings, and which is today a favored visiting point for tourists walking the Freedom Trail in Boston. (American Airlines photo)

MANY OF THE thoroughfares of Boston, such as Pinckney Street on Beacon Hill, still retain much of the quaint flavor they held back in the days when Americans were moving from colonial status to independence.

SIR NATHAN OF JACOBSON,

Ugly American Or Goodwill Ambassador

By MURRAY J. BROWN

NEW YORK (UPI) — No one expects every American on vacation to be an expert on foreign affairs, languages, customs and traditions. But you may add much to the enjoyment of travel abroad by learning something about the people and places you intend to visit.

Probably even more important, such an obvious interest in the other fellow's problems and way of life could help erase the image of the self-centered "ugly American" which still survives in some areas.

And you may—as I have—make many new and interesting friends.

ACTUALLY, IT IS not all that difficult to double as an unofficial ambassador of goodwill for the United States while enjoying yourself.

The main thing to remember is that you are a guest in a foreign country and that the United States may be judged on the impression you make. It works both ways — you probably will base your opinion of the country on the people you meet and how they act.

Usually you should have no language problems in most popular tourist destinations abroad—a surprising number of local residents speak at least some English. But it really doesn't take too long to learn some common phrases like "good morning," "thanks," "excuse me," "goodbye" and even "Where is the bathroom, please?"

It not only is flattering to your hosts but you might be pleasantly surprised at how eager they will be to be extra helpful.

And you will be a lot more comfortable—and enjoy yourself more—if you know something about local customs and traditions. They differ from country to country, and continent to continent.

For instance, Europeans shake hands (just a quick pump) with men and women every time they meet, and they will be impressed if you give them your calling card. Some, particularly in Italy, still kiss a lady's hand and in eastern Europe men and women often are welcomed with a bear hug and a buss on the cheek.

IN ASIA, THE generally accepted greeting is folding the hands as in prayer and slightly inclining the head. In Japan, however, you bow unless the other person offers his hand first. The deeper the bow, the more respectful. The western handshake is becoming increasingly popular, however.

In many countries, particularly in the major cities and big towns, people generally dress much more conservatively than Americans usually do at home. So leave the aloha shirts and shorts in the closet and save the casual wear for traveling or the beaches and mountains. And never, ever wear hair-curlers in public.

If your sightseeing plans include places of worship, observe the local traditions.

DESPITE THE recent relaxations on dress in Rome, women in Europe still are expected to cover their heads and arms (and no miniskirts or slacks) when visiting Roman Catholic churches. Before entering Moslem mosques, you are expected to take your shoes off. Don't smoke or take pictures unless permission is granted.

You will have to leave your shoes outside in Japan, too, when visiting homes, inns, restaurants, tea and geisha houses and other places which maintain the old customs.

Table manners differ, too. It is not considered proper to pick up a piece of fried chicken with your hand in certain European countries. But if you should be invited to dinner in some areas of the Middle East, it is customary to use your hand (the right one only—the left is taboo) to take what you want from a communal pot and transfer the food to your mouth.

HERE ARE some other general guidelines that could help you avoid embarrassing yourself or offending your hosts:

—Don't take photographs of people or places without prior approval. Some people in Asia and Africa object on religious grounds. In other countries, particularly in eastern Europe, pictures may be prohibited because of propaganda or military security reasons.

—Don't refer to Europeans, Asians and other non-Americans as "natives." You probably won't mind being identified as a native of the United States but would resent being called an American native. And never call a porter, waiter or anyone else in Asia or Africa "boy" — it is regarded as a derogatory term associated with the days of colonialism.

—Don't brag about how great everything is in the United States while putting down everything that is not American.

—Don't believe everyone is out to cheat you. There are some that will but the majority are honest—just as in the United States.

—And last, but far from least, don't be a loud-mouth.

Most veteran travelers agree that the American who is least liable to win friends and influence people is the one who never speaks below a shout. It's not only irritating, but downright rude.

NOT EVEN THE FJORDS of Norway surpass in scenic grandeur some of those to be found along Alaska's rugged coast. Here the cruise ship Polar Star is seen in its Inside Passage voyage at Tracy Arm, considered by many to be the most beautiful area in all Alaska.

Replacing The Washer On The Faucet

By ANDY LANG

The single lever and other types of faucets that do not utilize washers are making some inroads in modern plumbing, but the very large majority of faucets still require periodic replacement of washers.

If you don't neglect the first step in this repair, you'll have no trouble handling what follows. That initial move is simple: merely turn off the shut-off valve to the faucet line. Sometimes it's under the sink and sometimes it's in the utility room or basement. If you can't find it, close the main water shut-off valve to the house. Whichever valve you use, it's turned off when you move the handle clockwise as far as it will go.

NEGLECT THE warning about shutting off the water—and don't think it doesn't happen—and you'll be amazed to find that the water comes shooting upward with enough pressure to soak the ceiling.

Loosen the cap or packing nut under the faucet handle with a wrench with smooth jaws, first placing a piece of adhesive tape around the cap to prevent marring it. Next, turn the handle clockwise until the stem or spindle comes loose. Some lift out, some must be unscrewed.

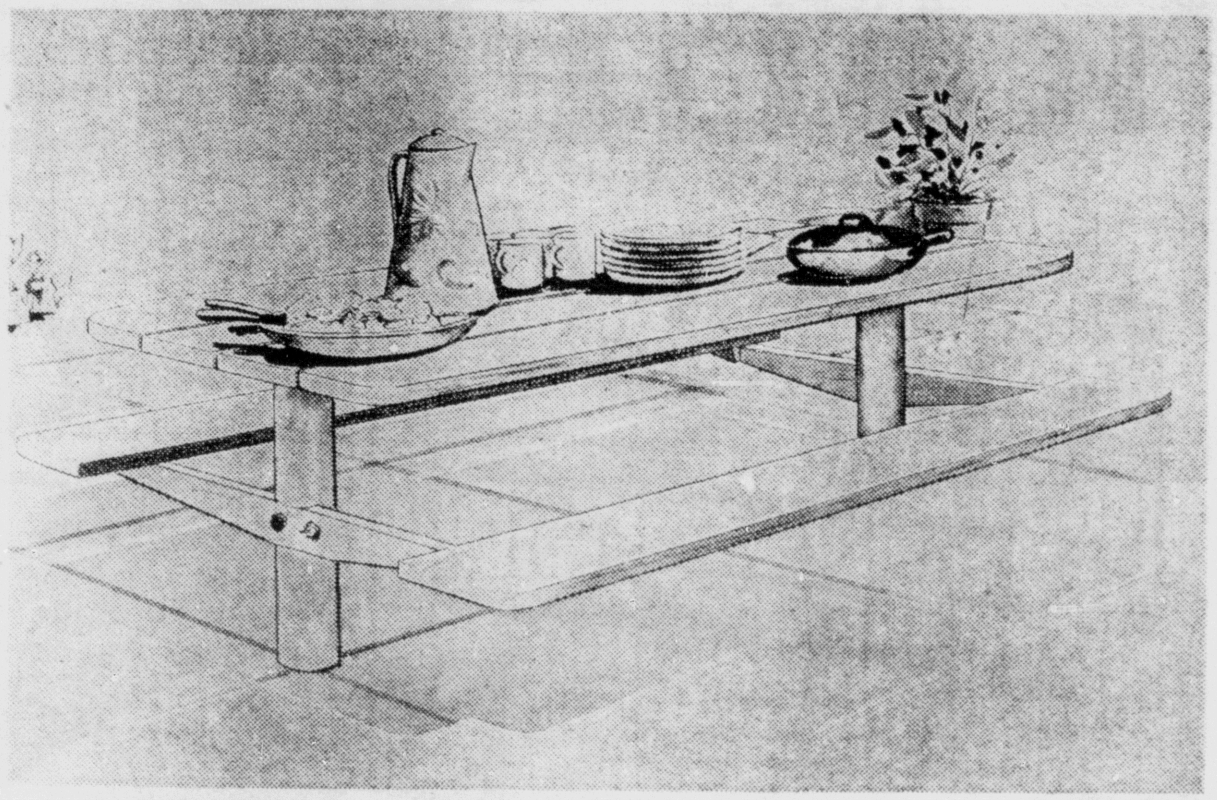
Remove the chewed-up washer at the end of the stem by taking out the holding screw. If you keep a box of assorted washers and screws around the house, as you should, attach a new washer and screw, replace the stem and the job is done. If not, take the old washer to the store and get one the same size, using the opportunity to buy the box of washers you should have had in the first place.

OCCASIONALLY, after washer replacement has been made, the faucet will continue to drip. This is an almost certain sign that the faucet seat, on which the stem and washer rest, has developed burrs or some other uneven quality. To smooth it, you need a seating tool, which is inexpensive and easy to use; the directions come with it.

Less frequent than the leak that comes from the faucet spout is the one that occurs at the packing nut. First see if the leak stops when the nut is tightened, again remembering the caution about the use of adhesive tape. If it doesn't, replace the old packing under the cap. You can buy it at a hardware store.

Getting back to the spout drip, suppose you replace the washer and smooth the seat only to find that there is still a leak? The chances are that the stem or spindle has outlived its usefulness. Take the old one to a dealer and get a duplicate. Some hardware stores and hardware departments of lumber yards carry them, but even then you may not find an exact match. In that case, a plumbing supply store probably has or can get what you need.

Fortunately, about 99 times out of 100, a dripping faucet yields to the mere replacement of a washer.



THIS NOVEL picnic table requires a minimum of lumber. And because no lumber need touch the ground, it has an especially long life span. The posts are concrete, iron or steel, set in cement. The table can be built six-feet, eight-feet or 10-feet in length. And it is easily dismantled for winter storage, if one prefers to do so. Covered with polyethylene, however, it will withstand the worst elements without damage. You can send 75 cents to Independent-Journal, Post Office Box 215, Briarcliff Manor, N.Y., 10510, and ask for Lifetime Picnic Table Pattern No. 577. Be sure to include your zip code number.

Garden Page

MARGUERITES need but little attention, yet they produce a truly dazzling carnival of color that continues in your garden for many months. Furthermore, they are a versatile plant. In white, yellow or even pink, Marguerites will not only highlight your landscape, but, in portable containers, can also be used in unique planting situations for special eye-catching effects. Shown here is one white Marguerite adorning the top of a retaining wall adjacent to some garden steps. From far away or up close, their impact is considerable. (Photo courtesy of California Association of Nurserymen)

The Reasons Why Everyone Likes Daisies

Is it any wonder that everyone likes daisies?

They grow almost anywhere and under most any condition, but thrive especially well in Marin. Daisies require little attention and they produce a dazzling carnival of color many months of the year.

THIS PAIR IS highly recommended by the California Association of Nurserymen for use in sunny borders or as feature items in containers for use on entry porch or patio.

Marguerites are available in nursery containers and often full of bloom when you transfer them to the garden.

The yellow-flowering Marguerite rivals the spectacular white-blooming one for popularity with California gardeners. Pink Marguerites are newer introductions and shopping may turn up double flower forms of these varieties, whose pink coloring is soft and delicate.

THE GARDENER is able to create pleasing effects with Marguerites. The yellow ones are striking when grown with and contrasted to the blue hues of Delphinium, the pink of Petunias, or the blue of that other daisy mentioned above — Felicia.

Felicia is also known as Blue Marguerite, though the two are not related.

The low, compact growth serves as an eye-catching border. As an accent plant, Felicia is hard to beat. It's also ideal in raised beds and may be used on slopes where its drought-resistant characteristic pays off in minimum maintenance.

Both Marguerite and Felicia are easy to grow and nurserymen will have the duo available in various size transplants. For those who wish instant beauty, get the larger-size specimens which will immediately add splashes of color to the surroundings.

IT IS NOT uncommon, to find in the nursery landscape-size yellow and white Marguerites in full color. What a face lifting to the garden the addition of a few containers of these make!

Whether you start from small plants from nursery flats or rely on the larger editions for immediate effect, you'll enjoy the continuous beauty the daisies provide.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

✓ Hydrangeas in bloom may still be set out this month, but some varieties are coming to the end of their flowering period.

✓ For shaded and semi-sunny areas, use coleus in a basket to decorate your outdoor living areas. It won't cascade as do some container plants, but it will give you a spectacular showing of multi-colored foliage.

✓ Need a quick, sunny border? Rely on such dwarf marigolds and zinnias as the Mini-Pink, the Cherry Buttons and the Thumbelina.

✓ In trimming your private hedge, shear it so that it is slightly wider at the base than it is at the top. This exposes the lower part of the hedge to sunlight and keeps it green and healthy.

✓ Feed dahlias now if you haven't done so in the past month. Large-flowered, show varieties should have their side buds pinched out to direct all the growth to the few terminal buds.
